

Food Prices
Ease
Again

OTTAWA (CP) — A continuing moderation in food prices held the rise in the consumer price index to three-tenths of one per cent during February, Statistics Canada said today.

The increase in the cost of living for the 12 months to February, at 9.1 per cent, was the smallest for any 12-month period in more than two years. It was mainly higher costs for owning or renting a home, for clothing and transportation that pushed the index up for February.

Higher insurance rates for autos, dwellings and household effects also had a noticeable effect.

The moderation in food prices once again occurred largely in meat products as has been the case for the past three successive months.

Beef prices declined nearly five per cent in February, pork prices about one per cent.

Costs of dairy products except fluid milk declined as did price levels for fats and oils items.

Partly offsetting these declines were seasonally higher prices for fresh produce, while some cereal and bakery products as well as soft drink prices moved up.

Food prices are not directly controlled by the government's anti-inflation program, and their decline cannot be traced to the program.

However, it was announced this week that the anti-inflation board is considering bringing insurance rates under the program's control because of many consumer complaints.

Higher insurance rates were an important contributor to February's cost-of-living rise.

Housing prices for both owned and rented accommodation, together with higher electricity and gas rates in many Ontario cities, accounted for much of February's over-all index rise.

These costs likely will go higher because of the government's decision to raise the Bank of Canada's lending rate for loans to chartered banks effective last Monday.

BIG BANK ACCOUNTS MEAN CUTOFF

Tighter Mincome, Welfare

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

A Mincome assets test and tougher social assistance eligibility rules were announced today by Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

The minister said persons aged 60 to 64 applying for mincome will now be required to complete an asset or means test.

Single persons with assets exceeding $2,500 or married persons with assets greater than $5,000 will no longer qualify, he said. Assets are defined as bonds, bank accounts, mutual funds or property, but do not include a person's home, his first car or his household or personal effects.

Vander Zalm said the regulations will not apply to the 30,000 people in B.C. currently receiving Mincome but only to those who will be applying in the future. Persons over the age of 65 are not affected.

Vander Zalm also said employable persons living in designated low-employment centres across the province will no longer be eligible for social assistance.

"If a person wishes to move to an isolated spot such as some Gulf Island or remote mountain top... then he'll be disqualified from receiving social assistance."

"From now on persons moving to such areas and expecting welfare are out of luck."

He said his department is developing a map for the province which will designate low employment areas.

"It clearly does not make sense for an unemployed person to relocate to an area where there is little or no possibility of his finding a job."

The policy applies to transients and not to established residents of such areas.

Vander Zalm said he was disturbed by the number of persons who choose welfare over unemployment insurance even though they may be eligible for the latter.

He said measures will now be taken to limit benefits for those persons waiting for UIC to a maximum of two weeks. And, he said, "a new emphasis will be placed on existing policy whereby persons disqualified from receiving UIC are not eligible for social assistance."

Vander Zalm said persons who quit work or refuse employment will also be disqualified.

"People, who, of their own accord, take themselves out of the job market cannot expect to be supported from the public purse."

Former Premier Dave Barrett called the Mincome asset test "cruel and mean and a betrayal against the people."

But Vander Zalm defended the move, although he conceded it will probably generate "some resentment."

"It's not meant to be a police chase, nor a scare thing, but the changes need to be made," he said.

"People are using it (Mincome), wide open."

He said the test is designated "to close a loophole where a few people with $100,000 in a safety deposit box are collecting Mincome."

"Everybody should not be entitled to mincome," he said. "It's not only a matter of income but also wealth. We aren't in the business of increasing a person's estate."

He said the assets test will give "a better deal for us from Ottawa — a better sharing on the return of money we receive from the federal government."

Any Gov't Pay Boosts
Mean Tax Hike: McGeer

Any future wage increases for government employees will be reflected in increases in provincial income tax, says Education Minister Pat McGeer.

"The only way a person, let's say, could get an 8.5 per cent increase... would be out of direct tax increases from the general public," McGeer said.

"All these raises that are now coming, which in the past have been more or less disguised in an expanding economy, will not be disguised any longer."

"There is a direct relationship between increased taxes to the individual and the amount that will be paid in the way of increased salaries."

The minister specifically mentioned salaries for hospital employees and teachers. "The economic cupboard is bare," he said.

McGeer said that if the province's economy improves in the next couple of years a different arrangement might be made but the state of the economy now is such that wage increases to government workers will be reflected in income tax increases.

Asked today in what areas the government might propose to raise taxes to meet rising wage demands, McGeer said: "Well, you can figure that one out for yourselves... just look at the Clarkson and Gordon report."

The report forecast a deficit of $541 million for the current fiscal year ending March 31.

B.C. Teachers' Federation president Bill Broadley said today McGeer's statements were a "whole economic argument I think he's wrong about."

Broadley said McGeer's statement is based on the assumption that there will be no rise at all in provincial revenue during the year.

"The government is taking an attitude that there is no money at all available for general expenditures. They're doing it in everything — day care, resource boards — and education."

Quick
Barrett
Byelection

Premier Bill Bennett today ordered an immediate enumeration of voters in Vancouver East in preparation for a by-election to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of former resources minister Bob Williams.

Williams resigned 13 days ago to give former premier Dave Barrett a chance to regain his seat in the legislature, lost in the Dec. 11 election.

Bennett, who returned Wednesday from a 10-day vacation in Palm Desert, Calif., said he would call a by-election once the enumeration is completed.

He said he has asked the provincial secretary to instruct registrars of voters Ken Morton to begin a door-to-door canvass in the riding.

Two weeks ago Bennett said a by-election would not be called until July but today said it would probably now be held sometime sooner. He would not specify any date.

Bennett castigated Barrett for waiting two months before deciding to seek re-election.

He said he didn't want to see the riding unrepresented but found the timing of the NDP "unusual and surprising."

BATTERED U.K. POUND
IN HOLDING PATTERN

LONDON (CP) — The battered British pound remained steady today after Prime Minister Wilson said his government is committed to defending the value of sterling.

"We are determined to maintain the value of sterling externally as we are to maintain the value of what sterling is worth internally," Wilson said in a recorded British Broadcasting Corporation interview.

Bankers said the Bank of England intervened more vigorously to fight downward pressures on the pound which at midday stabilized at $1.91 U.S. after dropping to $1.8950 at the opening.

In Canadian terms, the pound rose by more than one-quarter cent to $1.8978 from Wednesday's close.

Army Rebels in Beirut

BEIRUT (UPI) — The Beirut army garrison rebelled today calling for the immediate resignation of President Suleiman Franjeih.

Shooting broke out throughout the city almost immediately.

The garrison commander, Brig. Aziz Ahdab appeared on television and declared a state of emergency throughout Lebanon. He announced a curfew was in immediate effect.

Ahdab called on parliament to elect a new president within seven days. The new president would have to form a new government immediately, he said.

The rebellion broke out within hours of an emotional television broadcast in which Premier Rashid Karami indicated he was resigning.

In his broadcast, Karami said Lebanon was a sinking ship and he knew that, "the captain, when he sees this, has to act in order to save the ship instead of leaving it to be tossed about by the wind. But until the last minute."

Syrian peacemakers, meanwhile, returned to Damascus.

VANCOUVER (CP) —

Three persons have been charged with possession of narcotics for the purpose of trafficking after city detectives seized nine ounces of heroin and two ounces of cocaine. Street value was placed at more than $400,000.

UVIC MED SCHOOL?

Education Minister Pat McGeer said today the provincial government is considering establishing a second medical school and that the most likely site would be the University of Victoria.

McGeer noted Victoria is the largest metropolitan area in Canada without a medical school.

He said space prospects for a person enrolling in a medical program in B.C. were the poorest of any province in Canada.

At present the only medical school in the province is at UBC and the government announced plans earlier this week to double enrolment from 80 to 160.

Dr. J. W. Ibbott, president of the B.C. Medical Association, said Wednesday he was "unalterably opposed" to the expansion plan. (See Page 27).

However, McGeer said the important objective is to maximize the use of existing facilities for medical students and students taking studies in other health programs.

PM Supports Drury Role

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau acknowledged in the Commons Wednesday that people before the courts should not talk to judges about their cases or have friends talk to the judges on their behalf.

But, he insisted, the relevant question in Public Works Minister Bud Drury's admission that he talked to a judge about a case involving one of his cabinet colleagues is whether the minister "tried to influence the course of justice."

He accepts the word of Drury that he did not try to exercise such influence, the prime minister said.

Opposition MPs angrily denounced the government's repeated refusal to disclose what was said when Drury talked to Mr. Justice James Huggesson of the Quebec Superior Court who was hearing a contempt of court case against Consumer Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet. Ouellet was convicted and has appealed.

Meanwhile, Richard Holden, the prosecutor in the contempt-of-court case against Ouellet, said Wednesday that copies of letters from Judge Kenneth Mackay alleging cabinet interference in the judiciary came from his office.

In a telephone interview from Montreal, Holden said Richard Cleroux, a reporter for the Toronto Globe and Mail, asked to look at the letters, dealing with Holden's fee, which were written by Judge Mackay to Justice Minister Ron Basford.

"I didn't realize that my private secretary would give

Times News Services

OTTAWA — While public attitudes have to be considered by a government dealing with the issue of capital punishment, "it should be kept in mind that uninformed or irrational public opinion is no justification for bringing back the noose," a B.C. criminologist said Wednesday.

Public opinion polls on the abolition issue "would have us believe the public is vindictive, retributive and bloodthirsty," said Essat Fattah, of Simon Fraser University, in a report prepared for the solicitor-general's department.

"On matters relating to crime and punishment," he said, public opinion "is determined by emotions shaped by the popular depiction of criminals in fiction, films and TV programs."

Basing himself on published opinion polls, Fattah isolates various conclusions including the following:

—The province of Quebec has generally reported a higher support for the death penalty than the rest of the country.

—Roman Catholics are less opposed to capital punishment than Protestants.

—Americans have always been less in favor of the death penalty than their Canadian neighbors.

—The better educated tend to be more tolerant in their attitudes toward punishment, and more opposed to the death penalty.

—The few psychological studies on the issue showed that supporters of the death penalty tended to be "people who are insecure, who were severely brought up and who are maladjusted socially."

—Authoritarian persons tend to be more punitive toward others.

—Support for capital punishment seems to be associated with prejudice, ethnocentrism and with low regard for values such as equality, forgiveness and love.

—Supporters of capital punishment are more dogmatic than those opposed to it.

—Those opposed to the death penalty seem to do so on principle, regardless of its value as a deterrent.

Fattah's study, which leans heavily toward an abolitionist point of view, also points out that public support for the return of the noose is a complex attitude largely unrelated to crime rates or fears of crime.

Fattah uses women as an example of how support for hanging was generally unrelated to fear of crime.

He says studies have shown that women support the death penalty less than men although they fear crime more.

He adds that there is less support for the death penalty among the young although more and more of them believe that violence is increasing.

Pro-hanging support has now swung back in Canada to where it was in the forties and fifties when seven out of 10 Canadians favored the noose.

It had dipped to five out of 10, Fattah said, claiming the upward swing came as a result of a climate of political unrest coupled with the Quebec FLQ murder-kidnappings of the late 1960s.

A democratic government "should not simply reflect uninstructed opinion but should help shape sentiments to rational common ends, leading and enlightening public opinion," the report states.

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Northwood Pulp and Timber Ltd. will halt production Sunday because the British Columbia Railway strike has blocked the supply of chlorine, essential for pulp bleaching, a company spokesman said Wednesday.

Ottawa Jailbreaker Captured Following Siege in Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — Glen Thomas Landers, 29, one of seven prisoners who broke out of an Ottawa-area jail eight months ago, surrendered to police Wednesday after a three-hour armed siege at an east-end home ended without bloodshed.

Ottawa police confirmed Landers' identity by fingerprints and police here were awaiting instructions on what to do with their prisoner.

The Lancaster Street residence where he was captured had been under police surveillance before the capture.

In the June, 1975, breakout from the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Detention Centre, two guards were shot—one wounded seriously. Three prisoners were recaptured immediately, including Barry Forsyth who was charged with attempted murder.

Wednesday's drama began when Lois Grant, Landers' sister, said she was apprehended by police as she left the house with her three children.

She said later that police then used a loudspeaker to order her brother and Gil Loubier, 26, the man she lives with, to come out of the house.

Mr. Loubier complied but Landers fired a shot to show he was armed and asked to speak with his mother. He also wanted Sun reporter Larry Still to conduct telephone negotiations for his surrender.

Outside the house, about 25 policemen blocked off streets and evacuated nearby residents. About 600 students at an elementary school one block from the house were ordered kept inside.

Special weapons squad officers took up concealed positions with high-powered rifles and an ambulance waited nearby.

Police then asked radio reporter Mike Dixon of CJOR, to come to a neighboring house to speak with the suspect by telephone. Mr. Dixon was asked to broadcast the surrender terms over the radio.

"The terms were that the fugitive would leave his weapons inside, come out of the house with his hands up and have pictures taken."

After coming out with his hands up, Landers was escorted to the neighboring house where he was photographed and made a brief statement to the news media.

"The reason I asked that reporters be brought in is because I have to be transferred back to Ottawa pretty soon and the other people when they were arrested were beaten by the police and jail guards so bad they were unrecognizable," said Landers.

"I asked that reporters be here to take my picture because what I look like today, I want to look the same when I go before the court in Ottawa."

Asked if he had intended to hurt anyone, Landers replied: "I didn't intend to harm anybody unless I was forced to."

Police said two handguns were found in the house. No one was injured in the incident, the second here in six days involving a surrounded gunman. Last Friday, a man was arrested following a fatal shooting in an office supply business in the Kitsilano district.

Mrs. Grant said her brother had been living normally for the last five months, going out frequently and taking her young children to a nearby park.

"We let him babysit my 2½-month-old boy," said Mrs. Grant. "He practically raised my kid for 2½ months. He was really good with the kids."

Don't Blame Me Buchanan Says

TORONTO (CP) — He cannot correct wrongs committed against native persons in Canada in the past, federal Indian Affairs Minister said Wednesday.

Mr. Buchanan was answering a questioner during a panel discussion on native land settlements at the University of Toronto who asked why she should trust him after the way the government has treated native people in the past.

"Don't you try and lay on me the past injustices of the last 200 years. I can't correct the wrongs that have been done over the past 100 years," the minister replied.

Earlier in the discussion, Buchanan said he could not guarantee that a land settlement would precede a construction of a pipeline in Northern Canada.

Rick Harty, president of the Metis Association of the Northwest Territories, said native people want a right to self-determination within Canada.

The native people want their aboriginal land — 250,000 square miles in the Northwest Territories — and they are not interested in giving up their rights in return for compensation, he stressed.

Crowe Loses Appeal

OTTAWA (CP) — The Supreme Court of Canada today ruled Chairman Marshall Crowe of the National Energy Board should be disqualified from presiding at a Northern pipeline hearing.

In a 5-to-3 decision, the court agreed there might be a danger of bias by Crowe because of his earlier membership on the board of a pipeline company.

There was no immediate comment from the board on the affect the decision will have on its northern pipeline hearings, adjourned since early February when the Supreme Court case was begun.

However, although no one has said it will be used, a section of the Energy Board Act allows the replacement of a member at a hearing if he becomes sick or incapacitated.

Three public interest groups had challenged Crowe on the basis of his membership on the Arctic Gas Ltd. board of directors before he was named to the chairmanship of the energy board on October, 1973.

Second Tokyo Raid

TOKYO (Reuters) — Police looking for evidence of bribes paid by the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. in Japan raided the giant Marubeni trading house today for the second time in 16 days.

The raid concentrated on the No. 1 machinery division of Marubeni, the Lockheed agent here, which was in charge of imports of Lockheed TriStar jetliners for the domestic All-Nippon Airways.

Police sources said that they were seeking information which might identify top government officials alleged to have received Lockheed bribes, as well as evidence of tax evasion and violation of foreign-exchange controls.

Officials of Marubeni, Japan's third-largest trading house, have denied any wrongdoing, although the firm's president and two of its executive directors have resigned.

Central Saanich Mailbox Vandals Given Warning

Central Saanich police have warned vandals who have been rifling mailboxes in the area the penalty for the offence is a maximum of 10 years in prison.

Chief Bob Miles said 35 to 40 complaints have been received since just before Christmas, mainly in the Greig Avenue and Brentwood Drive areas.

Items have been taken from mailboxes and either thrown on the ground nearby or taken a short distance away and opened and the contents thrown away.

Some residents have lost income tax forms and other important papers and in one case birthday presents for a young child were ripped out of their parcel and thrown into a tree.

Police believe four or five juveniles are responsible and Miles said they probably did not realize that their actions constitute theft of the mails which brings a maximum 10-year prison term.

Police will make visits to Brentwood Elementary and several youth clubs soon to outline the problem and the offence for those caught.

Working on the Railroad

The CPR has provided voluminous statistics to the Canadian Transport Commission on exactly why it should be allowed to abandon passenger service on the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway. It has provided a dozen pages of background material alone to the press covering the CTC hearings in town, filled with a brief history of the E and N from 1969, statement of profit and loss detailing to the last dollar every expenditure on the E and N and the revenues accruing from the line. Figures for operation costs and revenue per passenger mile are worked out to tenths of a cent.

Certain other statistics are absent from the railway's presentation, which are highly relevant though. The CPR likes to treat the E and N as a small, entirely separate entity, with no connection to the rest of its far-flung, profitable conglomerate — the way a rich relative tends to keep at arm's length his poor and seedy second cousins.

That's what outrages so many about the CPR's attitude towards the E and N — the supposition that the average man apparently can't make a connection between the enormous land grant that went with the E and N and was intended to subsidize its construction and operation, and the shabby condition of the rail line today. Does the CPR think the E and N can be considered apart from the 1.9 million acres it was given gratis 90 years ago, plus a $750,000 cash bonus?

While we're talking about profits and losses, consider a fact entered in the record of the CTC hearings last week up in Courtenay. Ronald Ellis, chairman of the Comox-Strathcona regional board, noted that between 1946 and 1974 some 773,000 acres were sold from out of the land grant bringing the CPR $136 million.

Is it just a one-way street? Apparently so. The CPR parent corporation receives the benefit of profits from land sales, but the E and N year after year continues to run in the red.

Consider another interesting figure. The Sloan royal commission which studied B.C. forestry in the 1950s put a value of $100 million on the E and N land grant. Would the sharp-pencilled accountants at the CPR, who can trace to the last dollar the cost of axle grease on the E and N, care to provide Vancouver Islanders with an up to date figure? While they're at it, how about the financial statements on the forest operations of Pacific Logging, the CPR subsidiary which operates in the land grant?

Using such a balance sheet, no one would think twice about dismissing the railway's sad claims about red ink on the E and N. The trouble is that the CTC makes a narrow interpretation of the matter. In the statement of the line's finances appended to its official notice of hearing, you will not find any of the above figures. Under revenue you will find excessively detailed accounts of costs of wages, depreciation, fuel etc. for 1974 but not a line about how much the CPR earned from land sales that year. Or from timber operations.

What is also discouraging is that the CPR does not seem to take seriously the challenge of running a railway on the island. It does not seem to bother much with carrying out CTC orders. Nor does the CTC seem to care much whether or not its orders are carried out. For example, only when it was made public in the current hearings that E and N stations were locked up on Saturday — directly contravening a 1970 order of the CTC — did CPR officials suddenly discover ways of arranging open stations on weekends.

From descriptions by Ronald Smith, regional planner for Cowichan Valley regional district, it would seem that the railway didn't do much about another CTC order that it "maintain stations, shelters and platforms in a clean and sanitary condition, and remove all weeds and undergrowth from station platforms."

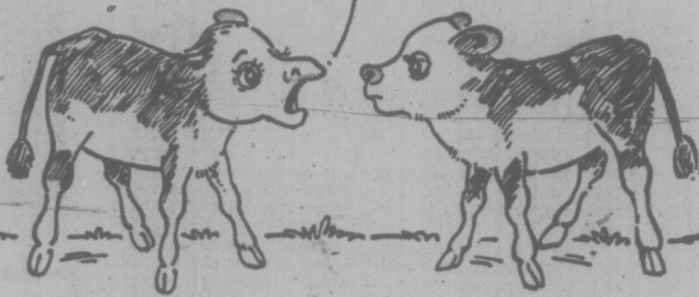

We wish the CTC's bite was half as bad as its bark.

The diverse body of individuals, associations and governments on the island fighting to keep the E and N operating are not motivated by some nostalgic urge to preserve what is old but no longer useful in these modern times. The railway is definitely needed, for passenger service as well as freight. There are mining and power developments planned along its route. With a little imagination and a few dollars spent on advertising, the CPR could exploit the tourist potential of the line.

It hasn't really tried in the last decade. Instead there has been an apparent policy of slowly downgrading the operation, and the CTC hasn't tried to stop them.

If the CPR wants out from under the awesome burden of red ink, then the CTC should relieve it also of the lands which went with the railway. Fair is fair.

Slashing Firemen

I was very disturbed, as should most citizens of Victoria be, to see that the city council recently completely slashed provision for an additional 18 men from Fire Chief Simmon's budget. I realize that the city has to save money, especially in these days of inflation, but it should not be done at the expense of the protection of lives and property (which includes both the police and fire departments), and I am sure that there is not a reasonable minded citizen that would object to such cuts.

There are many frivolous expenses which can be cut from city budgets, and many ways where cuts can be made of wastage. Just take a walk around town these days and look at all the street works going on, and just a five minute observation will convince anyone that when one witnesses just one individual working (and not very hard at that), and the rest standing around watching him, there is something wrong. Yet our buildings and lives can be placed in danger in order to find money for other departments that are not doing their jobs properly.

What amazes me the most about all this is the fact that city fathers must have authorized the fire chief at some time to purchase the additional aerial ladder for which he needs the men, now they do not want him to be able to man it and use it. I suppose this is another expensive piece of equipment that is going to stand around as a showpiece and never be used through lack of manpower.

I think every citizen should rise up and demand that the city take a second look at this expenditure right now. Maybe it could be handled with one or two less men, this is up to the efficiency experts, but in no way should it be left un-manned and the expenditure cut out altogether. Several recent fires in Victoria should convince anyone of its need. What are we going to do, wait for a calamity to happen?

Their departments should be run efficiently and economically, but they should still have all the funds required to do a proper job for us. For a start, maybe we could do with fewer aldermen. — Harold Morton, P.O. Box 4223, Postal Station A, Victoria.

Bus driver's lament—careless pedestrians.

Bus Driver

In reference to the letter Bus Line Blues which appeared in the Wed. March 3, Times:

I would like to wish you a speedy recovery from your "nervous breakdown."

Your letter touched me deeply, but I'm afraid I can't understand your situation as you put it.

You said: "Feb. 10 I was crossing Johnson Street from south to north on a green walk light. Unfortunately the 4 p.m. downtown bus was turning west while my humble pedestrians were fighting for space. Perhaps we should be called lonely pawns fighting a losing chess match against knights in transit. I was not walking. I was running for the sad sake of being alive."

Earlier in your letter you referred to yourself as a concerned pedestrian of fogged Victoria. This makes me wonder! Have you had your eyesight checked lately? It was not foggy then and all the walk lights on that corner are not green but white.

You were not walking, you were running, fighting for space as you put it. May I suggest that seeing as you don't know east from west or north from south, or the color of lights, or even what the weather is, that perhaps you are like a lot of other Victorians who completely ignore "don't walk" signs and feel that they mean "run, you might make it" and to hell with the traffic that is trying to make a legal turn.

If you had fallen in front of my bus, I would have obtained your name and those of witnesses and we would have met again, possibly in court, over your written word.

Seeing as you did not sign your real name, but signed as Stone Cold Blues, I shall sign — Off Duty Knight

Guilty Conscience

We have received a money order dated Jan. 28, 1976, in the amount of $100 from an unknown person whose conscience suggests he or she is indebted to the federal government. The envelope was postmarked Victoria, B.C. dated Jan. 28, 1976.

Would you kindly acknowledge receipt on behalf of the federal government of Canada by mentioning this item in the letters column of your newspaper? — D. P. W. Prot, Head Appropriation Accounting, Comptroller's Branch, Supply and Services, Ottawa.

State Murder

From a moral point of view capital punishment is absolutely wrong. If it is immoral for an individual to commit murder under any circumstance then it is equally wrong for the state to commit legalized murder. Capital punishment reduces the state to that same moral level as those individuals who commit the crime of murder.

A Master of False Logic

OTTAWA — Only two months ago the prime minister was insisting that "the House of Commons... is becoming less and less relevant," but today there is no place in the world more relevant to Pierre Trudeau and his government.

That is where one of his most senior cabinet ministers, C. M. Drury, is gravely at risk and where the prime minister is skillfully trying to stonewall an opposition attack based on the admitted approach his ministers have made to judges about cases before they had been disposed of.

Trudeau has had to give a little ground, falling back upon a very uncertain position: His decision to ask the chief justice of the Quebec superior court whether the incidents require some further form of inquiry. To ease immediate pressure from the opposition benches Trudeau has given up one surprising card, leaving it to the chief justice of Quebec to decide what, if anything, will be made public about his reply to the government's question. His move occasioned some surprise that he did not keep that option open.

The prime minister cannot know what reply will come from Chief Justice Jules Deschênes in due course, although that jurist has been tart in the past over ministerial activities that seemed to impinge on matters before him. If the judge replies that some further inquiry is desirable, Trudeau is committed to it, although not to any particular form of investigation. The form would demand some very sensitive thought. No one would be much troubled at seeing ministers called as witnesses before a formal inquiry but the prospect of calling judges in that way does not cause much delight.

Not Delightful

If the judge replies that no further investigation is necessary, that he has satisfied himself on the matter, that would dispose of the question of an inquiry but it would not dispose of the problem of public opinion and public confidence. Some supporting observations, to put it mildly, would be needed if public confidence were to be protected and the prime minister has surrendered control of this.

The new leader of the opposition, Joe Clark, was still away on vacation the day the affair came to light and John Diefenbaker led the party. Clark was on hand the next day and he started off strongly, trying to pin the prime minister down on some basic and important points of principle. What followed tells a great deal about Trudeau's style of argument, which is ruthless in the extreme on partisan occasions, and the current state of Conservative battle-training.

Mr. Justice Harry Aronovitch had made a short statement, clearing Treasury Board President Jean Chretien of actual "interference" in a bankruptcy case that interested him, but otherwise sharply putting the minister in his place. He had said that Chretien's call annoyed him because, as a lawyer, the minister obviously knew he should not have done such a thing.

If Chretien has any political wisdom,

Advice to Joe Clark—Watch for Trudeau's false premises.

he will leave that ball exactly where Justice Aronovitch dropped it and never try to pick it up again.

The prime minister took the favorable part of the Aronovitch statement, exonerating Chretien of actual interference, and constructed a shining halo around the minister's head. It was about as meretricious a halo as it could have been, inviting the opposition to tear it off because its construction had been so false. Clark missed the opportunity and went plodding on with prepared questions about abstract principles. The rest of the Tories missed the chance, too.

A more politically sensitive aide in the gallery scribbled a hasty note and sent it to the floor. Much later, MP Allan Lawrence tried to catch up with the lost opportunity. He forgot that in the House of Commons members cannot get up and start reading from newspapers. He tried. The speaker promptly cut him off for a breach of the rules and passed on to another member. That time the opportunity was gone for good.

The first lesson in this, for the Tories, is that effective opposition demands flexibility, not rigid adherence to a fixed plan of attack.

The second lesson of the day is one that has escaped the Tories ever since Trudeau entered the House of Commons. It is that they have great need to study his style of argument and spot the patterns. Trudeau, having the benefit of a French education, was trained in logic. Most English-Canadians no longer are, which places them at an inherent disadvantage in confronting the prime minister.

Trudeau not only understands the logical approach like everyone else who does, he also knows all the logically disreputable tricks that go with it. In any debate, he is as capable of ruthless use of the dishonest aspects of logic as of the discipline itself or of switching back and forth from one to the other. He has two basic tricks of logic which he uses repeatedly in the House of Commons and,

Shell Game

The false premise that Trudeau put in place, as he began the afternoon's work, was that an inquiry would involve investigation of judges of the Quebec superior court. He then built a convincing, logically impeccable argument on the impropriety of such a thing. A political investigation of judges? Heaven help us — not to be thought of, utterly wrong and so on and so on.

The force of the argument was inescapable. It could only be attacked by exposing the falseness of the premise, by demonstrating that if there were an inquiry it would not be into the conduct of the Quebec bench, but of Trudeau's ministers. Once that is established, of course, the whole pack of cards disintegrates, which is always the weakness of using the tricks of logic rather than the discipline itself.

Broadbent tried but he did not match the premise out sharply enough and the structure swayed back and forth but did not actually collapse.

So, a word of advice to a new opposition leader: When you cross swords with the prime minister, always look carefully at the premise he is using. And keep your eye on it as carefully as if you were gambling on the shell game.

Mrs. Woodsworth

I read recently of the death of Mrs. James S. Woodsworth at the age of 102 who was the widow of the founder of the CCF-NDP. I feel that for this great lady who contributed so much of her life to helping others, that some tribute should be made to her.

As a child in Winnipeg, I spent many a happy hour in the missions they started in one of the poor neighborhoods. Thousands of children passed through there and learned the value of helping their fellow man. The immigrants, the working people, the poor, and all who came in contact with them, were enlightened by their great philosophy of life. Perhaps her name is not as well known as her husband's, but I am sure that she lives in the hearts of many people.

May I share their philosophy at this time, as I feel it would be appropriate?

"We are thankful for all the good things of life. We recognize that they are a part of our common heritage and come to us through the efforts of our brothers and sisters the world over. What we desire for ourselves, we wish for all. To this end may we take our share of the world's work and the world's struggles." — Jewel Rodstrom, Victoria.

Accident Victims

I have an idea. If you put injured automobile accident victims on compensation with the Workers Compensation Board it would eliminate a lot of lawsuits. Also it would give the injured two-thirds of their pay for the time of their recuperation and thus would keep them off welfare.

The Workers Compensation Act is funded by contributions from both employer and employee so why couldn't this scheme be funded the same way?

There would be no hardship in the family as the worker would be getting two-thirds of his wages and would not be costing the government money by having to resort to the embarrassment of applying for welfare assistance. Look into this. — M. R. Anderson, 1006 - 875 North Park Street.

punishment, how many would be willing to act as executioners? If you wouldn't willingly volunteer for the job then you have no right to ask someone else to do your dirty work for you.

It has been proven many times that capital punishment does not act as a deterrent in which case it can only be assumed that the advocates are motivated by some form of revenge and revenge is a form of ethical conduct that is immoral.

Economics has no place in an evaluation of moral values. Those who would consider a 25 year sentence from the economics involved have no moral base for their evaluation. — Alex Hyde, Courtenay, B.C.

Strong Displeasure

The executive council of the Vancouver Island Branch of the Royal Commonwealth Society expresses strong displeasure at the action taken by the Canadian Association of African Studies at their annual meeting in Victoria, B.C. on 20th February, 1976, in preventing Dr. J. H. Moolman, director of the African Institute of South Africa, from presenting a bona fide academic paper at their convention; and thereby seriously impeding the tradition of free speech which we as Canadians cherish so highly. — E. Parker, Sec., Royal Commonwealth Society.

Oil Spills

On Feb. 28 the results of an oil spill began along the exposed shores of Vancouver Island between Pacheena Bay and Port San Juan Bay: the 44 mile route of the West Coast Hiking Trail.

One observer believes that this spill exceeds any that have occurred since World War II. Traces occur every winter on that part of the coast, usually with bird fatalities, chiefly murres. On this occasion nearly 200 dead or seriously affected birds including ducks, murres, cormorants, loons and gulls have been counted in the vicinity of Clo-oose. Over three dozen could only be identified by the shape of their bills so heavily coated with crude oil were they.

To anyone who cares about wildlife, and I think most of us do, the effects of oil spills are distressing or even excruciatingly painful to perceive. They are not easily dismissed by the rationalizing part of man's admittedly adroit reasoning. Reasoning that always seems to win out by minimizing its own responsibility where it is so obviously culpable. Consumers, cut down voluntarily and care about what is happening at sea and on beaches. — J. W. Hamilton, Clo-oose, B.C.

The Ministers: Curtis

Once One of 'Beggars' Now He Has to Say No

By PAUL ROSS
Times Staff

Probably the first thing most people notice about Hugh Curtis is that extraordinary broadcaster's voice.

It's hard to describe without lapsing into an advertising copywriter's droolings. Deep, smooth, dark-chocolate rich, with beautifully measured cadences, it lounges caressingly on the air waves.

As Palmolive's hateful Midge might have said, in the days when he was burbling CFA radio commercials: "You're soaking in it; softens your ears while you do the dishes."

But in Curtis' life these days there's a steadily mounting background noise which threatens to smother those velvet tones. It's not the pounding beat of the rock music he likes to relax with, but the strident clamoring for alms and succor of 139 money-desperate B.C. municipalities.

As the Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, Curtis is the man with the shekels continually besieged by these ululating civic beggars. But for this year, at least, he's having to shake his head and walk on by.

It's a flinty-hearted attitude that can't come easily to someone who has climbed up through the ranks of those self-same beggars, who knows only too well the financial strait-jacket they're in.

'Dollars not there'

If the denials hurt him, though, Curtis gives no sign during a 40-minute interview which he has crammed into a busy day.

Shirt-sleeved and looking relaxed in one of the comfortable chairs of his ministerial suite, he adopts the air of the complete pragmatist: "1976 is going to be very much a holding year. They (the municipalities) understand that and I have indicated as much to the UBCM (Union of B.C. Municipalities) executive.

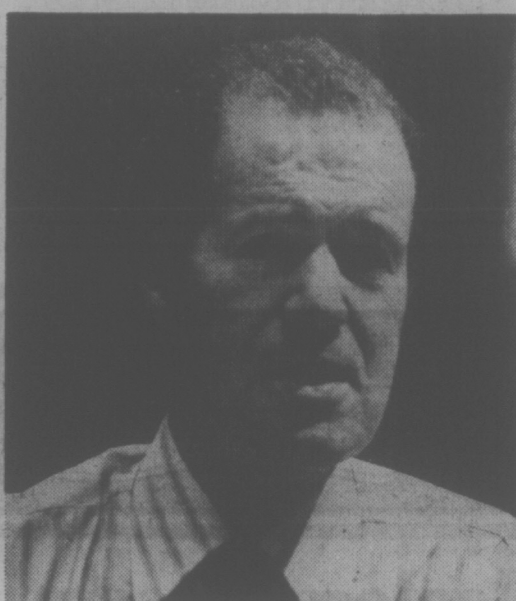

"The dollars are just not there for us to innovate or significantly expand our programs in this fiscal year."

Curtis says the most that can be expected this year is some kind of patching action through transfer payments, while planning begins on the complex task of setting up a revenue-sharing program for municipalities.

The government hopes to have such a program, "with a fair degree of permanency built in," operational in 1977.

Back in 1972, when he was still mayor of Saanich, Curtis said in a newspaper interview that the dearth of dollars at the local government level was the "crisis of the century in the development of our country."

"There's not enough money for local government to do the job being asked of it," he said then. "Property tax as a means of running local government should have been buried years ago. All the cosmetics like homeowner grants don't help; they just cover up the pimple."

HUGH CURTIS ... 'learning Fast'

Does he still feel that way, now that he's on the other side of the fence? Well, attitudes change along with times and political fortunes, it seems.

There's only a moment's pause before The Voice replies: "I think the demands on property tax are still immense, far greater than they should be. But with the wisdom of another four years I don't think I would have said that property tax as such should have been buried years ago. Property tax has to have other sources of revenue added to it."

Similarly with homeowner grants, he said, it can be argued that they're "of assistance in the absence of something a little better."

The 43-year-old Curtis who is now working 12 or 13 hours a day, six or even seven days a week as he settles into his major dual portfolio of municipal affairs and housing, has already been more than 15 years in public life.

That's only 10 years less than the total notched up by his father, the late Austin Curtis, who served on Greater Victoria school board and Victoria city council for 25 years.

Began at 29

It was partly this background and a "process of osmosis" coupled with a friend's persuasion which brought Curtis junior into civic politics at the age of 29.

From the time he first became a Saanich alderman in 1961 his record reads like a computer-programmed set of perfect qualifications for his present role: three years as an alderman; nine years as mayor of Saanich; first chairman of the Capital Regional District and re-elected to that position five times; first chairman of the Municipal Finance Authority of B.C.; president of UBCM; vice-president for B.C. of the Canadian Federation of Mayors.

But while provincial politics beckoned on the distant horizon, the preceding service was not part of a carefully prepared game plan, Curtis says.

"I decided when I was in municipal politics that at some point, hopefully, I would like to get into the provincial scene. I hoped to be a minister in a good government."

The first step toward realizing that ambition was an easy one: his walkover election as a Progressive Conservative in 1972. (Interestingly, the minister's official 12-paragraph biography discreetly avoids any mention of his former true-blue colors. It merely says he was "elected to the British Columbia Legislature, representing Saanich and the Islands, in the general election of August, 1972.")

Long dithering

In the pokey office on the top floor of the Legislative Buildings which he shared with Tory leader Scott Wallace, and in their lonely caucus meetings, it must have seemed to Curtis that his prospects for elevation to ministerial status were about as bright as those of the rodent and noxious weed inspector in Port Hardy.

After months of dithering and to no one's surprise, he crossed the floor to become a Socred in October, 1974, becoming in the process something of a political trend-setter.

Defector's taint notwithstanding — and he suffered his share of gibes and taunts at the hands of the NDP — he was fairly convincingly re-elected last December when he captured 51 per cent of the vote.

Why does he do it? What are the satisfactions of the job?

"Clearly," replies Curtis, "it's the belief that I have something to contribute to the system."

But the price has to be paid when the demands of the minister take precedence over those of the family man. There's the constant danger of taking office stresses and strains back home in the briefcase.

Curtis says his three children, ages ranging from 12 to 18, have adjusted to the problems very well while he himself is "learning fast" and making superhuman efforts to set aside specific hours or days for family activity.

In ranging the gamut of his municipal affairs and housing responsibilities, Curtis gives away little of substance, either in plans or general philosophy, to the interviewer.

But he is on record as favoring land and home ownership, rather than the leasing arrangements and co-operative housing schemes so dear to the hearts of the former government. He says, too, that he wants to get the private sector involved in construction of rental housing, and programs designed to encourage that are in the offing.

Curtis views with some concern the rapid growth in Greater Victoria's western suburbs, and considers it "desirable" that View Royal, Colwood and Langford fall under the umbrella of local government.

Powers gone

He pointed out, however, that the municipal affairs minister no longer has arbitrary powers to order incorporation in such circumstances, and this is "not something that is being actively worked on."

Curtis also admits to some worries over the burgeoning bureaucracy in certain regional districts: an awareness of a "growing frustration" on the part of municipal politicians who feel they are being swamped by the ever-growing scope of the districts' "functions and their runaway budgets."

A delegation awaits outside; the interview seems to be over. But then the minister, who was recently criticized by a Colonist writer for saying so little in an earlier interview, indicates he has one final unasked-for observation.

He is perturbed, he says, at the increasing trend toward closed-door meetings of municipal councils, and the formation of groups or cliques within councils.

If secrecy continues it may be necessary for the government to step in — perhaps through spelling out the "items that could properly be dealt with in-camera" and then relying on the news media watchdogs to ensure the policy is followed.

"I am not necessarily pointing the finger at Greater Victoria," Curtis added. "There are far more flagrant examples in other parts of the province."

"Perhaps this could be taken as a gentle warning that if it really gets out of control I would, reluctantly, look for a way to legislate against it."

The timbre of the voice is as perfectly modulated as it was in the beginning. The first impression ... and also the last.

POPE PAUL ... a non-news classic

They Spoke the Obvious

By ROBERT FULFORD
Saturday Night

This winter the Pope announced that he was against premarital sex, homosexuality, and masturbation. All across Canada — and, I imagine, all over the western world — newspaper headlines screamed this startling information to the presumably astounded masses. TV carried it as the leading item of the day, and so did radio. But it was, surely, a classic item of non-news. If a man biting a dog makes news, then this was a case of a dog biting a man. What did the media people expect? That the Pope would come out in favor of premarital sex, homosexuality, and masturbation?

***

Yet the fuss made over the Pope's declaration was no stranger — and no dumber — than the uproar produced by Prime Minister Trudeau's statements on the economy on December 28. The prime minister said (though not quite in these words) that the free market economy won't work anymore and that perhaps we are moving towards other forms of social organization. At one point he said: "The government is important ... there's going to be not less authority in our lives but perhaps more."

***

This caused even more excitement than the Pope's statements on morality. Across Canada editorial writers thundered, writers of letters-to-the-editor denounced the prime minister for heresy. Businessmen called the statement dangerous and Orwellian. The country shuddered in frightened anticipation. What would this madman say next? In fact, he said nothing but the obvious. The free market economy hasn't been the working principle of our society for a good many years and anyone who doesn't know this just hasn't been looking. Since the Second World War, successive Canadian governments have taken it upon themselves to manipulate Canadian society — and they have done so with the tacit or the explicit agreement of the voters.

***

Prime Minister Trudeau is not, to judge by his speeches and his extemporaneous remarks over the last eight years, a strikingly articulate man. He has a good speaking style but he seldom knows precisely what he wants to say. He thinks out loud, like a professor in a late-afternoon seminar or a man talking over the day's events with his wife at dinner. He possesses, so far as his speeches indicate, nothing that could be called a social philosophy.

***

What was important about that TV talk was not what Trudeau said but the national reaction to it. Our society is so dedicated to not thinking about its own nature, so committed to hiding its own actions beneath layers of meaningless clichés, that even the modestly phrased and tentative comments of our prime minister terrify us. If we ever happen to get in the prime minister's office a man who can actually figure out his own beliefs and then state them, the country will go berserk.

The Totalled Marriage

Although Cinderella and the Prince lived happily ever after, their marriage was not without incident, as we learn from the following fragment of the Prince's autobiography.

It had been another hard day at the castle. I had had a nasty session with the bankers about their failure to sell the new municipal bond issue and, to top it off, the court jester had been caught padding his expense account and had to be dressed down in front of the grand chamberlain.

I arrived home with a pounding headache and my mouth set for a few beers, a steak and a dose by the television set. Cinderella met me at the door. She was wearing black mesh stockings, a transparent negligee and black patent-leather shoes with three-inch spikes.

"The glass slippers aren't good enough for you any more?" I asked. In reply, she executed an undulating movement, which I pretended not to notice. I asked if there was some cold beer and aspirin. Instead of replying, she merely undulated with increased vigor. I recognized the symptoms. Cinderella had been studying The Total Woman, and, worse possibly, The Sensuous Woman.

Well, one hardly feels up to coping with a total woman after a brutal day at the castle. On days like that one wants only to live happily ever after. Cinderella's strong point, however, was the tinniness of her feet, not her social perception. "When I finish belly-dancing for you," she said, "I am going to put you in a hot tub and rub whipped cream all over you."

The prospect of being coated in soap suds and whipped cream, I'm afraid, brought out a certain baseness in my character. Or perhaps it was the humiliation of imagining what that swindling court jester would say if he learned of it. In any event, I quickly invented an excuse to go out. "Dear little Cinders," I said, "have you forgotten? We must pay a surprise visit this evening on your three ugly sisters and discuss my scheme for getting them some smaller feet wholesale."

While Cinderella was upstairs changing, I called my fairy godfather for help, but his wife said he could not come to the phone because he was immersed in a tub of whipped cream. Left to my own devices, I used my royal reasoning power. Why not, I asked myself, give Cinderella a taste of what it meant to have totality around the house by playing The Total Man?

In a thrice, I raced upstairs, scooped up Cinderella and, opening a window, held her suspended upside down by the heels some 30 feet from the sidewalk. "So strong," she murmured when I had withdrawn her. "So manly."

***

"You said it doll," I replied. "And if you don't want an ear caulkflowered, get on over to those three ugly sisters of yours and don't come back here until you've done something about those hams they use for feet. I'm going to stay home and snore at the TV."

Next evening, the same thing. Home I came with the usual headache. There was Cinderella undulating. Spiked heels, stockings, negligee. I closed a hand around her windpipe and lifted her. "Cinderella," I said, "I'm going to tell you a secret about my fantasies of women."

She gasped eagerly. "What really drives me wild," I told her, "is a woman who's been tarred and feathered."

Say this for Cinderella: She was determined to have a marriage that was more than just living happily ever after. Joyfully she ran out to the garage and began heating tar. It must have taken her hours. I had time to take some aspirins, cook and eat a steak in peace and drop off to sleep by the television set after five or six beers.

Her cries for help woke me during a stomach-alkalizer commercial. Through the window I saw her being carried off by an owl who was under the impression she was a chicken. (Cinderella was ever a tiny creature.) Leaning out the window, I told her not to worry because at midnight the owl would turn into a pumpkin.

It was many years before I saw her again. She told me the owl had been attacked over the Alps by an eagle who had always wanted a total chicken and she had been carried to the eagle's aerie and forced to perform the gizzard dance of the Delmarva broilers every evening for years until the eagle's jealous aerie godmother turned her into a woman.

After that, our evenings at home were relatively pleasant ever after for quite a long time, and Cinderella and I aged mildly, without whipped cream.

Carter's Florida Win Cuts Democratic Field to Three

By JULES WITCOVER
ORLANDO, Fla. (WP) — Jimmy Carter's striking victory over George Wallace in the Florida primary effectively cuts the Democratic field to three serious, active contenders — Carter, Henry Jackson and Morris Udall.

As the 1976 presidential elimination contest enters its second phase, Wallace remains a factor, but probably as no more than a spoiler after being humbled by 34 to 31 per cent by Carter in what has been one of Wallace's strongest states.

In the first phase that began with Carter's victory in Iowa's precinct caucuses and ran through four early primaries culminating here Tuesday, three starters have been victimized — Terry Sanford, Lloyd Bentsen and Birch Bayh.

Three others have been left hanging precariously at cliff's edge — Sargent Shriver, Fred Harris and Milton Shapp.

Carter now goes into next Tuesday's Illinois primary seeking to demonstrate what Jackson said Wednesday he must prove — that he can win in a major northern industrial state.

Running in Illinois against Wallace but neither Jackson nor Udall, Carter said Wednesday, "I think I'll come in first there."

Illinois will be only one of four states in which Carter will attempt in the next two weeks to complete the job he started impressively in Florida — finishing off Wallace as a serious 1976 hopeful. In Illinois, in another head-to-head primary in North Carolina on March 23, and in precinct caucuses in Kansas and Virginia on April 3, there will be what Carter called "a much clearer test" of Wallace's strength after his defeat in Florida.

While Carter concentrates on taking most of the steam out of Wallace, the former Georgia governor must look forward to the challenge thrown down by Jackson, who polled a respectable 24 per cent and gained 21 delegates in a late Florida effort; confronting Jackson in the big industrial states of the North.

Jackson, with solid support from many political leaders and the Jewish community in New York that has dominated Democratic primaries there, has predicted a possible landslide for himself in that state.

He has been hoping to lure Carter as well as Udall into the country's second largest arena on April 6.

However, Hamilton Jordan, Carter's campaign manager, said Wednesday after a strategy meeting here that Carter will make only a limited effort in New York and Wisconsin.

sin, both holding primaries on April 6, and concentrate on Illinois, Kansas, Virginia and North Carolina.

Jack Quinn, Udall's political director, and John Martilla, the Boston political consultant working for Udall, have both said Wisconsin will have first priority on the Udall campaign's limited funds.

As a result, Jackson stands a good chance of picking up the bulk of New York's delegates — a coup that probably would put him in the lead in the delegate race.

Carter suggested Wednesday day in Chicago that he will try to cut into the Jackson strength with a frontal attack on "political bossism" in New York, which he charges has rigged the delegate-choosing process there against him.

In New York candidates need 1,250 signatures on petitions to place slates pledged to them on the ballot in each of the state's 39 congressional districts. Carter has filed in 34. He has been removed from the ballot in five districts and is being challenged by Jackson on grounds of improper filing in the others.

Policeman Ambushed

SEATTLE (AP) — A King County police officer was shot Wednesday in an ambush as he escorted a jail prisoner from Harborview medical center.

Virgil Johnson, 32, was escorting John Sherman from the hospital when another man, dressed in a white hospital gown, approached the two.

"I'm going to take your prisoner," police said the man told Johnson, then pulled a gun from a paper sack and shot the officer in the stomach.

Sherman and the other man then fled in separate vehicles. Johnson's service revolver was missing after the attack.

Killer Whale Shipping Blocked by U.S. Judge

SEATTLE (CP) — U.S. District Court Judge Morell Sharp issued a temporary restraining order Wednesday to block the movement of captured killer whales in Puget Sound. He scheduled a hearing for Friday.

The restraining order was sought by the state attorney-general's office, acting on the orders of Gov. Dan Evans.

The governor said he favors a blanket moratorium on the capture or hunting of the giant marine mammals in the sound.

Senators Henry Jackson and Warren Magnuson, both Washington Democrats, had urged creation of a whale sanctuary.

Public protest continued and one environmental group, Friends of the Dolphins, said: "If all else fails, we will attempt to buy the captured whales."

The dispute centres on the weekend capture of six killer whales in Budd Inlet by Sea World Inc., a company which wants the animals for display in aquariums around the country.

The whalers have a valid federal permit and if the whales are kept, they would be the first captured in U.S. waters since the 1972 federal law went into effect.

Taiwan Aid Trimmed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States state department is planning a sharp reduction in U.S.-financed military credit sales to Taiwan in a move toward closer relations with China, sources say.

The administration is asking Congress to approve $35 million in credit sales for Taiwan in fiscal 1977, down from $80 million for the current fiscal year.

In justifying the reduction, officials said Taiwan's economy is becoming strong enough to take care of the island's own defence needs and that a plant under construction for assembling combat planes on Taiwan is nearing completion.

But other qualified sources said the $55-million aid reduction is tied in with the long-range U.S. strategy of closer relations with the People's Republic of China.

Meanwhile, there was no immediate confirmation of a report in the Boston Globe that President Ford gave a secret pledge to Chinese leaders to cut the U.S. military force in Taiwan to 1,100 in the next year from about 2,200. This would be in line with recent trends which have seen U.S. forces there cut from 8,600 four years ago.

The Globe said Ford made the pledge to Vice-Premier Teng Hsiao-ping during the president's visit to China last December.

Taiwan has been a major stumbling block in U.S. efforts to move closer to Peking. The U.S. aid program for Taiwan is not the only problem.

FREE FLU SHOTS EYED FOR U.S.

ATLANTA (UPI) — Authorities at the National Centre for Disease Control may recommend that the federal government make a flu vaccine available to the public free of charge to protect the U.S. from a possible major epidemic next fall.

Dr. David Sencer, CDC director, said the agency was concerned that the A-swine virus would strike a large part of the population during the next flu season because people would have no natural protection against it.

The CDC's advisory committee on immunization practices held a special meeting Wednesday to make immunization recommendations for the 1976-77 flu season.

Sencer said the committee had reached no decisions about its recommendations, however, and that the free vaccine idea was only a possibility.

Concerning this season, Sencer said the North America wide epidemic of influenza is showing signs of easing for the first time in nearly six weeks.

Health departments report 499 U.S. deaths attributed to the current epidemic of A-Victoria influenza last week.

A Break In Patty Trial Boredom

AN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Harry Kozol, long-time director of a centre for criminally dangerous sex offenders, took the stand at the Patricia Hearst trial Wednesday, and the prosecution promised he would be the very last psychiatric witness in the case.

Nothing could please those in the courtroom more.

Those on both sides in the bank robbery trial talk openly during recesses, in elevators, in the corridors, of their weariness of the psychiatric testimony that has taken over the case and prolonged it, and suspect the judge and jury feel the same.

Dr. Kozol, who resumes his testimony today, seems, like the other mental experts in the trial, to have come straight out of central casting for psychiatrists.

A diminutive, elderly, distinguished-looking man with a New England twang, that varies from Harvard to Pa Kettle, he appears perfect for an Alfred Hitchcock thriller, one of those quiet fellows full of surprises.

Dressed in a grey suit with vest, he sat back in the witness chair Wednesday, drummed the fingers of his right hand on the stand and, bringing smiles from the spectators — even the Hearst family — with his New England accent, soberly explained his unique line of work.

Much of this work in the last 20 years, he said, has involved "upset young people."

Primarily, he said, he is interested in social violence: Why are these kids marching in the streets? Why are they blowing up college laboratories? I'm not condemning them, he said, But how did it come about?

His mixture of minutiae, folksy little anecdotes and tales of horrible crime, recited in a case-history style with an occasional aside ("I've gotten off the track") was, at least, more diverting than much of the expert testimony.

Kozol said he told the prosecution he would not guarantee that his opinion in the Hearst trial would wind up favorable for the government's case against her.

He said he wasn't any great authority on prisoners-of-war or long-term kidnappings; this despite the defence contention that the Symbionese Liberation Army abducted Miss Hearst and forced her into the robbery as a POW.

The doctor meandered through the triumphs of his life (like other expert witnesses), the flattering offers he turned down, his hard work (long days, long nights, early mornings), and told about his jail questioning of Miss Hearst: He learned quickly, he said, that she talked directly and liked to be talked to directly, and so he asked:

"Why did you do it?"

And she said: "They told me to."

Miss Hearst, the doctor indicated, did not like small talk.

New Thoughts Favoring U.K. Visit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House of Representatives — as predicted — is having second thoughts about its rejection of Queen Elizabeth's invitation to a 25-member Congressional delegation to go to London to pick up the Magna Carta for the Bicentennial.

The proposal was turned down 219 to 167 Tuesday when the House leadership offered it as a routine resolution requiring unanimous consent. Some members called the trip an unnecessary junket that would cost taxpayers $50,000.

In a 134 vote Wednesday, however, the House Rules Committee agreed to send the resolution to the floor for another vote, and the full House is expected to take it up — and probably pass it — next week.

The U.K. parliament has asked that 25 members of Congress go to London in May to take part in three days of ceremonies with the Queen, government officials and parliament, during which one of the four original copies of the Magna Carta would be loaned to the United States for a year of display in the rotunda of the capitol to mark the bicentennial.

CAN ONE OF CANADA'S MOST SUCCESSFUL INTERNATIONAL COMPANIES GET GLOBAL RECOGNITION WITH A NAME CHANGE?

YES. HOW?

By changing our name we are now able to market our products throughout the world under one corporate name. This means instant recognition no matter where we sell our products.

Before we changed our name we sold our products as Northern Electric in most of the world. But in the largest single telecommunications market of them all, the United States, we were unable to do so.

In the United States the Northern Electric name was already being used by a manufacturer of electrical appliances. In addition, a competitive manufacturer there uses the name North Electric. Obvious elements of confusion for customers, suppliers and investors alike.

To avoid such confusion we have changed our name to Northern Telecom; a name which projects more accurately the nature of our products and the world-wide industry we serve. It is the name by which we will be known wherever we design, manufacture or market our products.

Through our plants and offices around the world, we design, manufacture and sell private and central office switching systems, electronic platforms for satellites, coaxial cables for cable TV, data transmission and business and personal communications apparatus.

The majority of our products are conceived and designed by the more than 1,700 people at Bell-Northern Research, our industrial research centre near Ottawa. Many of our products have established world standards for design, efficiency, reliability and cost.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN TO YOU?

We stimulated the economy last year through the $330,000,000 we paid our Canadian employees in salaries, wages and benefits.

Educational and cultural activities were improved through Northern Telecom grants to organizations across Canada.

It means we shared the Canadian tax burden with the more than $135,000,000 we set aside for federal, provincial and municipal taxes last year.

Also last year we bought more than $300,000,000 worth of goods and services from other Canadian companies, creating additional employment.

Over the past 12 months we exported $65 million in Canadian-made products and in components for use in our factories outside Canada.

We're convinced that the future can belong to Canada — to all of us. But we have to earn it.

We're doing our part with this simple commitment: to improve world telecommunication systems so that all nations can better communicate with each other.

Sewage Study Rotting Trestles Left Too Long—Engineer

Cost $32,000

By AB KENT
Times Staff

The Capital Regional Board Wednesday approved spending another $32,000 to have alternative methods of sewage disposal studies in the Colwood - Langford - Metcheson area.

Consultants are already under way on a $200,000 sewerage and drainage study and Wednesday's move would expand their work to include a close look at options other than the proposed outfall at Albert Head.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has agreed to a grant covering half the cost of the study, provided it includes an in-depth review of alternative methods of collection and treatment, directors were told.

The board was also advised that its engineering department regards a study of all options as essential to support an application for a permit from the provincial Pollution Control Branch.

Need for a sewage system in the western community was spurred last month with unveiling of a giant housing development in Colwood, proposed by Dunhill Development Corporation.

The Colwood Development Project envisages a mix of housing for up to 22,000 people, developed over the next 10 to 20 years on 850 acres flanking Latoria Road.

Residents in Albert Head will welcome word that other methods of sewage disposal are to be examined. They oppose the 8,000-foot outfall of Albert Head proposed in an earlier study.

In other business, the board referred a letter from William Venables, director of the provincial Pollution Control Branch, to its works committee after chairman Jim Campbell reminded directors that it is the board being held responsible for solving sewage pollution problems at Clover Point in Victoria.

Venables reminded the board it has only 16 months to complete a planned 6,400-foot outfall at Clover Point, where five million gallons of raw sewage are now discharged at tide-line daily.

Campbell said he does not believe that Saanich, Victoria and Oak Bay, the only municipalities involved in the long-delayed project, have had an appreciation of the need to move more promptly on it.

In the past two years, there have been lengthy delays while a complicated cost-sharing formula was settled and more recently the question of engineering supervision has stalled progress.

At present the matter of arranging a sub-lease with the Department of National Defence, which owns part of the point, has caused a new delay. Plans call for building an underground pumping station at Clover Point.

Two rotting trestles on the E and N Railway should have been in process of replacement by September of 1974 to ensure uninterrupted use of the line north of Parksville, which CP Rail closed last July, a railway official said Wednesday.

Divisional engineer Robert G. Kerr was testifying before the railway committee of the Canadian Transport Commission at hearings at the Custom House into CP's application to abandon the line north of Parksville to Courtenay and to drop dayliner service throughout the E and N system.

The company said replacement of the bridges, at an estimated cost of $2.2 million, would be too expensive compared with the revenue generated by that part of the system.

Under cross-examination by B.C. government counsel Melvin Smith, Kerr said the railway knew the condition of the bridges over French Creek and Sable River in 1969, when a survey showed there would be measurable decay in 85 per cent of the timbers.

Fungicide treatment carried out would prolong the life of the two trestles by five years, and meanwhile preparations were commenced to design replacement work which was put to tender in 1974.

First bids were too high and the work was offered again to selected bidders in December of 1974, with a closing date of Jan. 21, 1975.

It was considered one of the second set of bids was too high but a contractor was given to understand he would be given the contract for the other trestle, even though it was not signed, Kerr said.

Smith said considering the five years lead time in which to have new bridges built, "I suggest you moved at a very casual pace."

Kerr said Smith was not aware of the "behind-the-scenes" activity connected with policy and plans for new bridges.

Smith asked if notice had been given to the transport commission that time was running out on these bridges.

"It was not my position to do so," Kerr replied.

But ultimately, the CTC was notified, June 20, 1975, that service over the Parksville-Courtenay line would end July 1, 1975.

Kerr said he had indicated to his superiors in March of last year the bridges could not be considered safe after July.

But in order to ensure uninterrupted service, work on replacement should have started about September, 1974, with the timber ordered before that, Kerr said.

Smith asked what practices were involved in the replacement of capital works such as these; what is done about procurement of material, labor and budgeting.

Kerr said the company

erated by that part of the system.

Smith asked what practices were involved in the replacement of capital works such as these; what is done about procurement of material, labor and budgeting.

Kerr said the company must decide the most feasible and economic method of replacement, but it makes no allocations for labor or materials. He said he did his best to estimate costs and make recommendations, letting senior management decide.

He indicated there was no money reserved for this work.

"But it's different when you know these bridges are going to fall out of the system by 1975 — that's pretty crucial," Smith suggested.

Kerr replied that maintenance work would be done although the company was aware that 1975 would be the end for these crossings.

Smith asked why the railway's bridge and building crew could not have been employed to replace the trestles.

Kerr said the contractors are specialists in their work, although the time estimated for replacement was 12-18 months.

Smith suggested things might have been speeded up by using bridge and building men to assist the contractor and asked why this was not done.

"Because of the tremendous disparity in wages," Kerr replied, pointing out the contractors employ highly skilled, highly paid men because he can "get a lot of work out of them."

"Including getting the work done in a short period of time?"

"Yes," Kerr said.

Lawrence Past, cross-examining on behalf of Cowichan Valley Regional District, noted Kerr's estimate of time needed to do the work, and asked if the engineer knew how long it took to build the E and N Railway nearly a century ago.

"Would you be surprised at 12 months?" Past asked.

Kerr conceded that with several crews it might be possible to build in that time.

Nanaimo Mayor Frank Ney made a presentation in which he called for two daily trips by dayliner that would permit passenger stopovers in various communities and still return to their point of origin the same day.

More promotion — "for example, champagne flights, music and more local advertising" is needed to develop patronage, which is likely to increase with rising populations, and that may necessitate provincial government subsidy "or even expropriations," Ney said.

BNA: Provinces Line Up On Threat by Trudeau

Canadian Press

Most provincial leaders have rallied to a call by Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa to oppose any unilateral move by the federal government to change the Canadian constitution.

Prime Minister Trudeau said last weekend the government would act unilaterally in bringing the constitution to Canada if the provinces could not agree on the issue.

However, softening his stand in the wake of controversy, he said later he would not ask Parliament to act before he consulted with the provinces.

Canada's constitution, the 100-year-old British North America Act, now can be changed only by the British Parliament. A number of attempts to reach consensus on a domestic amending formula have failed in recent years.

As part of his campaign against unilateral changes, Mr. Bourassa has scheduled a meeting for Friday in Montreal with Newfoundland Premier Frank Moores. Mr. Moores is chairman of the conference of provincial premiers this year.

Meanwhile, other provincial leaders were making their views known.

Premier Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan said he considered the question of patriating the constitution "something less than an urgent public issue."

"I cannot understand why the prime minister would make such a statement unless he wishes to divert attention from the poor performance of his government and his minister."

He said if the federal government can make the change unilaterally, "regions of Canada other than Ontario and Quebec will always remain at the mercy of Central Canada."

Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta said he was disturbed by Mr. Trudeau's remarks and he hoped the prime minister would reassess his position.

He said the province would not reach a final position on constitutional amendments until consultations were made with other provinces.

Mr. Bourassa got in touch Wednesday with vacationing Premier Bill Bennett of British Columbia. Mr. Bennett's comments were not disclosed, but B.C. Attorney-General Garde Gardom, who heads a cabinet committee studying the constitution, said:

"I would certainly hope that in Canada we will respond to reason and that we will have a consensus throughout the country."

Premier William Davis of Ontario also said any changes in the constitution should be made in consultation with the provinces.

He doubted that the federal government would take serious action on the issue without the support of the provinces.

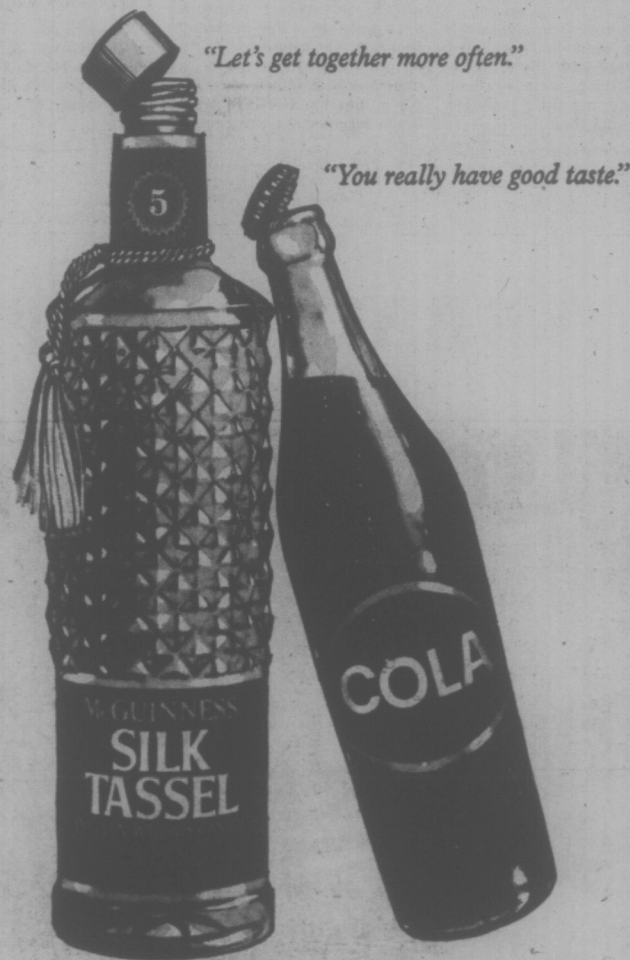

In Manitoba, Premier Ed Schreyer took a less militant stand against federal unilateral action.

Mr. Schreyer said that although his government would prefer to see Canada gain control over the constitution through joint efforts with the provinces, he would not oppose a unilateral move.

Premier Alex Campbell of Prince Edward Island also said he favored provincial consultation but warned that the provinces should not make the issue a bargaining tool.

"I don't want a unilateral position by the prime minister, and as a provincial premier I would think the attitude would be a healthier one if the constitution was brought home with the agreement of the provinces and the federal government," Mr. Campbell said.

However, he said that if some provinces continue to use the patriation issue as a tool for introducing other issues they are risking unilateral federal action.

Management Blamed

MONTREAL (CP) — The Confederation of National Trade Unions (CNTU) says that an accident in which four workers died on the Olympic construction site Monday night resulted from management error.

Marcel Pepin, CNTU president, told a news conference

Wednesday that an order was given to workers to remove temporary steel bars, supporting two 70-ton hollow concrete sections, before three permanent retaining cables had been moved into place.

The sections, in which four men were working, broke loose and crashed 185 feet to the floor of the giant Olympic stadium, killing the men.

Pepin said he did not know who was directly responsible for giving the order.

Roger Trudeau, director-general of the Olympic installations board, said Tuesday the accident was the result of failure to follow proper installation procedure, but did not apportion blame.

Pepin said if beams broke loose during construction, it was possible they could fall when the 70,000-seat stadium is completed and filled with people.

"They should verify the safety of the stadium, which was constructed in haste and based on a foreign technology which has not been tested in our climate," he said.

Pepin, whose union represents between 600 and 700 of about 3,500 workers employed on the site, also called for creation of a new safety inspection team of 50 persons, half appointed by the provincial government and half by unions.

He said safety inspectors of the Quebec Construction Office are hindered in their work on the site because the government places too much emphasis on meeting pressing completion deadlines in construction schedules.

The CNTU said in a statement, at least 11 persons have died on the site since the beginning of construction, but the names of only six victims were released at the news conference. The union says the other deaths were covered up by government inspectors.

An Olympic installations board spokesman set the official count at seven fatalities.

The union statement also said: "There have been 140 persons injured every day for the last while, of which 50 each day went to hospital."

$6 Million Olympic Suit Filed

MONTREAL (CP) — A French construction company and its Canadian subsidiary filed a suit in Quebec Superior Court Wednesday for over $6 million against companies involved in the building of the Olympic stadium and related projects.

Dumez SA, one of the largest construction companies in France, and its subsidiary, Dumez Canada Ltd., are suing Desourdy Construction Ltd., Desourdy Inc., Roland Desourdy and Paul Comtois for $6,158,971.

The Dumez companies allege the defendants violated agreements with them, in effect depriving them of their rights, abusing their mandate and ignoring them.

Alta. Deficit $75 Million

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta will have a deficit of $75 million to $100 million for the 1975-76 fiscal year despite soaring oil and gas revenues, but there will still be enough money to launch the Alberta Heritage savings trust fund, provincial treasurer Merv Leitch said Wednesday.

Leitch said the anticipated deficit is in marked contrast to the $39-million surplus predicted in his May 30, 1975, budget address.

He attributed the expected deficit to increased government spending and investment, including about $321 million in special warrants approved by the cabinet. However, the treasurer pointed out there would not be a deficit if $1.5 billion was not going into the Heritage trust fund, designed for projects to diversify the province's future economy.

Approximately $600 million from 1975-76 oil royalties will be contributed to the fund. The government had earlier said it would contribute 30 per cent of oil and gas royalties to the fund annually.

The interim financial statement for the nine-month period ended Dec. 31, 1975, showed the province had a cash deficit of $162.1 million, compared with a cash surplus of $329.4 million during the same period in 1974.

Curtis the Big Spender

By DEREK SIDENUS

Candidates vying for the five seats in the four Greater Victoria ridings in the Dec. 11 election campaign spent a total of $188,619.03, figures released by the registrar of voters show.

Social Credit candidates spent nearly half, or $92,877.86, while NDP candidates declared election expenses amounting to $51,488.82, the Progressive Conservative, $25,539.89, and Liberals, $18,712.46.

Of the three independent candidates in the Greater Victoria races only John Craggs in Esquimalt said he spent any money — $149.94.

Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis was the largest single spender. His campaign to retain the Saanich and the Islands seat cost him and his party $20,590.56.

Sam Bawlf and Ian Rendle, who ran for the Socreds in the two-seat Victoria riding, spent $36,683.54 — more than the combined total declared by the eight other candidates in the race.

Bawlf topped the polls; Rendle came fourth.

In Esquimalt, Socred Lyall Kahl declared expenditures of $18,990.17, nearly half as much again as the NDP candidate Frank Mitchell, who spent $11,027.95. Kahl won the seat by a 129-vote margin.

In Oak Bay, car dealer Frank Carson, running for the Socreds, paid $18,605.59 for his unsuccessful bid to unseat Tory leader Scott Wallace. Wallace said he spent $13,201.71.

Among the NDP candidates, Carol Pickup spent the most.

She declared expenditures of $16,513.29 for her campaign in Saanich and the Islands. Charles Barber and his running mate Gordon Hanson in Victoria collectively spent $22,119.66, while Raymond Vickery in Oak Bay spent $1,827.92. Barber was elected.

Irene Block, the PC standard-bearer in Saanich, spent $7,445.67. Her counterpart in Esquimalt, Thelma Dawson, chalked up $2,386.53 in expenses. And the two little-known PC candidates in Victoria riding, Lloyd Burdon and Peter Stanley, declared total expenditures of $2,505.98.

The Liberals had the least amount of money to conduct their campaigns. The two Victoria candidates, David Anderson, seeking re-election as MLA, and Terry O'Grady spent $1,326.36. The election cost Edgar Rhomborg in Saanich $4,845.20. Leonard Stephenson who ran in Esquimalt spent $1,657.37 but Lee Jameson, the Liberal candidate in Oak Bay, declared expenses totalling only $883.53.

Comparing the amount of money spent with the number of votes received, Rhomborg fared the worst of any candidate. His cost per vote worked out to about $4.12. At the other extreme were Burdon and Stanley — the 4,737 votes they received cost them in effect 32 cents each. The average cost per vote for most candidates was somewhere between $1 and $1.50.

Owen Kavanagh got the best deal of all. The 148 votes he received running as an independent in Victoria didn't cost him a cent. He didn't declare any election expenses.

Of the 23 candidates in the four election contests only William Scott, Victoria's "lighthouse philosopher" who ran as an independent, has yet to file a return on election expenses.

A spokesman for the registrar of voters said failure to file can result in a fine — minimum $200, maximum $2,000 — or in default six months in jail. However, he added, prosecution in the case of Scott is unlikely.

Around the province, the Socreds over-all party expenses totalled $794,984. NDP's were $342,481.

George Kerster, the political unknown who ran for the Socreds and defeated former premier Dave Barrett in Coquitlam, spent the most of any candidate in the province — $47,193.

But it cost him even more.

Kerster, in a recent interview, said his entry into politics was a contributing factor in forcing him to sell his car dealership, Surrey Dodge Ltd. The sale will be completed the end of this month.

"It's been worth it," he said. "Now I'll become a full-time politician."

Businessmen Plan For Centre 'Folly'

By AL FORRESTER
Times Staff

A plan by Victoria businessmen to help finance a convention centre would be economic folly, Mayor Mike Young said Wednesday.

He made the statement in Scottsdale, Arizona, after a day-long session with Scottsdale civic officials.

Young said a convention centre in Victoria would turn out to be a money-losing venture because most delegates would vote to go to a warmer climate for a winter meeting.

He said Victoria had to keep in mind the example of Calgary, not Arizona, on the convention centre issue.

"Calgary can only attract conventions in the summer months—when the businessmen don't want them—and the convention centre is idle for most of the rest of the year."

There would be a similar result in Victoria, under present conditions, he said. "If Victoria could establish itself as a winter spa like Harrison Hot Springs, that would be different. Victoria must establish itself as a winter resort area before it can hope to attract conventions at that time of year."

Young said he could not support the proposal presented by him by Victoria businessmen just before his Scottsdale trip because "the convention centre plan would be a waste of good money."

The plan, jointly presented by the Victoria Chamber of Commerce, Victoria Visitors Information Centre and the Victoria Downtown Association, urged a one per cent hike in the business tax as a starting fund for the centre.

The chamber had been urging the construction of a convention centre here for several decades.

Young said the correct approach would be for businessmen to demonstrate they can attract tourists to Victoria in the off season through some kind of winter festival or promotion.

If this is successful, then they could begin to think seriously of sinking money in-

Court Action On Tax Bills

The tax bills of four delinquent taxpayers in Esquimalt have been turned over to the municipal solicitor for court action, municipal treasurer Peter Cairns said Wednesday.

The tax bills total $16,500. Esquimalt set Tuesday at 4:30 p.m. as the deadline for payment of back taxes owing to the municipality and $60,500 was paid by that time.

The mayors paid for their own hotel rooms (at $28 each) but the charter flight was pre-paid by the Victoria Real Estate Board.

The mayors also paid for some of their own meals, although there was no charge for banquets and other receptions which were hosted either by Scottsdale Real Estate Board or the Victoria board. The two mayors also received gifts from Scottsdale mayor Bill Jenkins.

Radio Criticism Of Mayor's Trip Angers Charman

Victoria Real Estate Board president Eric Charman reacted with anger Wednesday night in Scottsdale, Arizona, to reports that Mayors Mike Young and Ed Lum were being criticized by Victoria radio stations for accepting the trip with the real estate board.

Charman told the closing banquet of the six-day seminar that the two mayors were in Arizona at the request of Scottsdale city officials, as well as the real estate boards of Victoria and Scottsdale.

Young, Lum and 99 Victoria realtors spent six days touring housing developments and tourist facilities. The mayors also studied garbage disposal methods and civic budgets. Scottsdale, a retirement and tourist city of 78,000 people, is considered a sister city of Victoria.

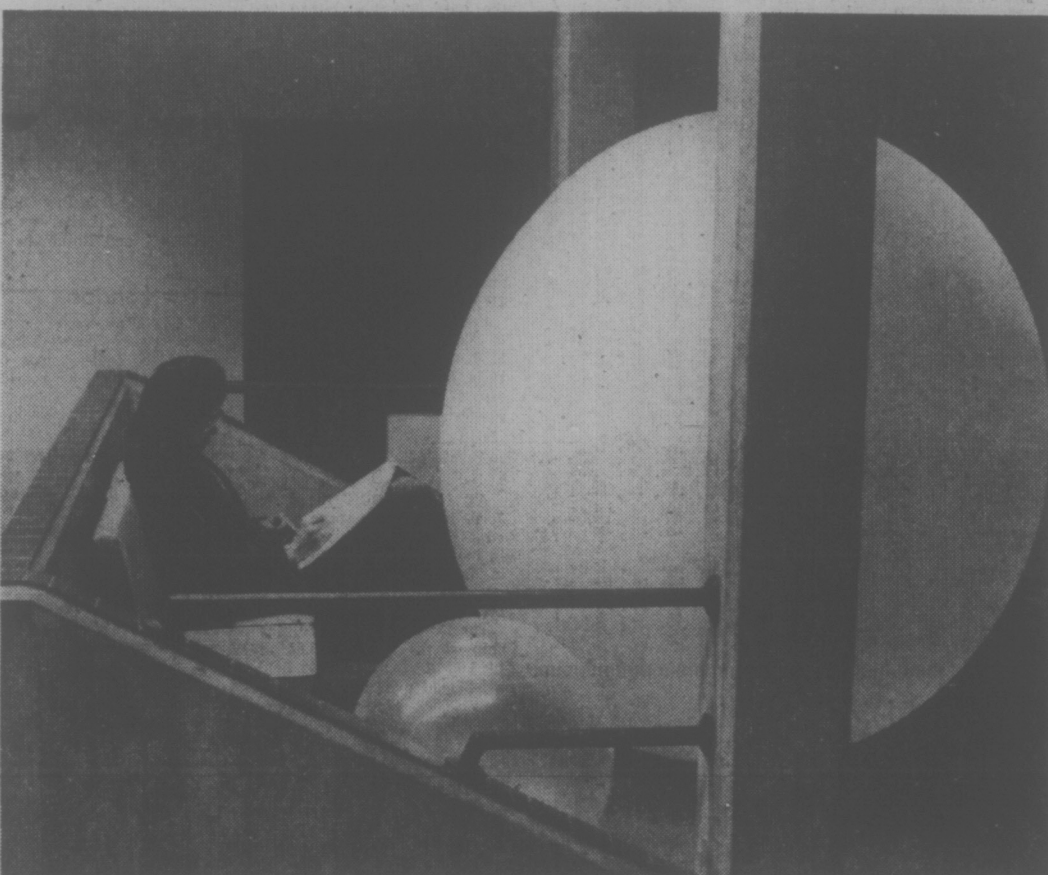

The mayors paid for their own hotel rooms (at $28 each) but the charter flight was pre-paid by the Victoria Real Estate Board.

The mayors also paid for some of their own meals, although there was no charge for banquets and other receptions which were hosted either by Scottsdale Real Estate Board or the Victoria board. The two mayors also received gifts from Scottsdale mayor Bill Jenkins.

Colford or Langwood Label For the New Municipality?

By DON VIFOND

Rapid growth and major building plans to the west of Victoria make it likely that a new municipality with its own government will be introduced there before long.

Regional directors from Colwood, Langford, Metchosin and View Royal will discuss the subject at a meeting with Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis later today.

A sampling of the views they are taking into the meeting suggests the new municipality might be called Colford or perhaps Langwood because Metchosin and View Royal seem reluctant partners.

Jim Campbell, chairman of the Capital Regional Board, advised directors of the meeting Wednesday and said that while he doesn't believe the region should be advocating a view, it had become increasingly apparent some initiative had to be taken if the growth problems in the western community were to be faced.

A committee formed by the previous provincial government to consider the question never got anywhere, he said.

Curtis sees today's meeting

... where are the brakes?

The directors involved are Earl Pallister from Langford, Howard Drummond from Colwood, Mac Tipton from Metchosin and Pat Massy from View Royal.

"I think it's something we've got to have—and have shortly," Drummond said today of municipal government. He's amazed the area has remained unorganized this long.

Colwood residents now have little or no control over what happens in their community and the giant housing development proposed by Dunhill Development Corporation last month in the vicinity of Latoria Road is a good example, he said.

Municipal status would give a new council development control and growth would not continue "like topsy." At present subdivision approvals come from the provincial highways department.

Langford's Pallister, the veteran director, said he'll keep an open mind on such a move until he's seen studies of such things as the tax base available, operating costs and available grants.

"If it can be a viable entity, then I can be for it."

Mrs. Massy of View Royal said she is left "a little bit depressed" by the whole business.

"I see an enormous metropolis out there and nobody seems to be trying to put the brakes on."

She has a feeling decisions have already been made on the future form of the western community, she said.

View Royal appears to have four alternatives — join Colwood and Langford, join Esquimalt, form a separate municipality or remain as is.

She senses residents favor the latter choice and it is her favorite too.

Mac Tipton in Metchosin believes some form of local government should come for Colwood and Langford but Metchosin should not be "lumped in."

Ask The Times

Q. A person has stated that elephants are afraid of mice because the mice get into their trunk and suffocate the elephant. Could you please find out if this is true or not and if elephants are really afraid of mice? B.R.

A. Our research indicates nothing to substantiate this claim of elephant suffocation. But the Vancouver Game Farm, the nearest elephant domicile known to us, assures us that elephants seem to fear any small animal, including deer and goats.

Q. Is it true that Canadian author Roger Lemelin wrote his first book while very ill, M.P.

A. Actually, Lemelin wrote his first novel, The Town Below, while recovering from a 1936 ski-jumping accident.

Out of the Trash, Quality-Plus

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

With imagination and loving craftsmanship, quality can evolve from the trashcan as easily as from costly materials.

"It's wonderful," says Garnet Fay, turning over a rough oddment of lumber in his hands, "what lovely things can often be fashioned from scrap."

He is an authority on the subject, although he would never make such a claim himself. The irresistible urge to create things out of wood, metal, plastic, whatever came to hand, is the story of his life.

But as, he says, "I've always been poor," he has developed an extraordinary skill at making do with what he would obtain economically or by salvage.

At the moment, with the assistance of co-worker Diane Murton, Garnet is spending every spare moment constructing and decorating the stage setting he has designed for the Victoria Actors Association forthcoming production, No Sex, Please — We're British.

They work in a small, cramped warehouse at Quadra and McKenzie almost every night of the week as well as Saturdays and Sundays. Visitors now and then walk in off the street to see what is going on.

Complete strangers, they ask questions, poke around curiously and go off saying they'll drop back to lend a hand, which they never do.

When they are told that all that careful, thorough work is for a play being staged at the McPherson Playhouse for five nights (March 16-20), they are stumped.

"They ask us why we put in so much time making a set that is going to be up for five nights," says Diane. "They think we're crazy."

Not everybody understand the Fay-Murton compulsions that insists the best way you can do it is the only way you can do it.

Stacked around the concrete-floored room are large flats, doorways with rich mouldings and ornamentation and artistically constructed specialty pieces.

In one corner is a completed, graceful flight of stairs with curving and carved balusters, leading nowhere at the moment, of course.

The work is done from beautifully drawn plans and a model.

Set pieces have to be laid one at a time flat on the tiny floor space, for gluing, nailing and painting. The creators won't see the units assembled until they arrive onstage at the Mac this weekend.

The Actors Association combed the city to find a space with a ceiling higher than 14 feet in which the work could be done, and the set erected so it could be studied during construction from a practical and actable standpoint.

All they could find for their rent money was what they have where nine feet ceilings prevent the scenery units ever being stood upright.

Garnet Fay has been involved with theatre in Victoria for more than 10 years, working with the Naden Amateur Concert Society, Gilbert and Sullivan, Victoria Operatic, Theatre Guild and Bastion.

He has worked on the sets of many memorable productions but it was with the new Actors Association that he took control of design and construction, his first full creation being the much praised setting for last spring's hilarious Move Over Mrs. Markham, which marked the Association's debut.

Term Deposit Rates Hiked by 3 Banks

TORONTO (CP) — Three major chartered banks—the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Bank of Montreal and the Toronto-Dominion Bank—have raised their term deposit and certificate of deposit rates as the latest move in their current round of rate revisions.

The increases were greatest at the shorter end of the term scale as had been predicted by analysts.

The new rates offered by the Bank of Nova Scotia on deposits of between $5,000 and $100,000 are as follows: For 30 to 59 days 8.25 per cent, up from 7.75; 90 to 179 days 8.75 per cent, up from 8.25; 180 to 269 days nine per cent, up from 8.5 per cent; and 270 to 364 days 9.25 per cent, up from 8.75 per cent.

The bank also quotes rates for terms for less than a year for deposits of a minimum of $1,000, unlike most other banks.

The rates for terms over a year were also revised by the bank. The new rate applying for one-through-five-year terms is 9.5 per cent against the previous nine per cent for one-through-four-year terms and 9.25 per cent for five-year. These rates apply on a minimum deposit of $1,000.

The new rates at the Toronto-Dominion Bank are a quarter of a percentage point lower than the Bank of Nova Scotia for the 30-59 day and 60 to 89 day terms but the same in all other cases, including those over a year. The new over-a-year rates were effective Wednesday as were all Bank of Nova Scotia term rate changes.

The Bank of Montreal's new rates also vary in some terms. The 180 to 269-day term deposit rate now is 9.25 per cent compared with nine per cent at the other two banks, and the five-year rate is unchanged at 9.25 per cent, the same as the other two.

The new one-to-two-year rate for a $5,000 minimum deposit at the Bank of Montreal is 9.5 per cent, up from 9.25 per cent and the rate for the two-to-four-year terms is unchanged at 9.5 per cent.

The changes for Bank of Montreal, generally the first since Sept. 4, are effective today. Only the five-year rate for deposits of $5,000 minimum was changed in the interim.

TAX TIPS: '76

Q. When filing tax returns, are commercial reserves and elevator deductions to be reported as income for the year they were paid out to a farmer?

A. Normally these will have been reported in the year when credited to his account, and would therefore not be included in his income when actually received.

Q. My husband has a farm tractor that he uses, not to earn his living, but to do his farming and a little logging and collecting of firewood. Can he claim any depreciation on this farm tractor?

A. If your husband is a farmer and is reporting income from farming or logging he would be able to claim depreciation on the tractor.

However, if he has no income from farming or logging, and the tractor is not being used for the purpose of producing income, he would be unable to claim any depreciation.

Q. My husband and I jointly own a farm. The income has always been declared on my husband's income tax form and the cost of running the business has been claimed on my husband's form, also. As the farm is owned by both of us, can I claim the cost of operation on my income tax?

A. The taxability of any income derived from this particular source, where there is a joint ownership, depends entirely on which of the partners supplied the money that originally purchased the property or business. In most cases, it comes entirely from the husband. Unless the wife has money of her own that she earns herself, or she had money that was left to her to invest in the farm, it is always considered for tax purposes to be the husband's income.

Q. What is the last date on which an application is accepted for the creation or increase of a basic herd?

A. Under the Act, no further provision for this is allowed. The last date for an application for the creation or increase of a basic herd was April 30, 1972.

Q. I am a farmer and employ a laborer for approximately 28 days each autumn. Must I make deduction for Canada Pension Plan and Unemployment Insurance?

A. No. But if you employ this laborer for 25 days and pay him $250 or more in cash, you must deduct for the whole period of employment.

Q. I purchased a combine and gave grain and livestock as part payment. How would I handle this transaction on my income tax return?

A. You should report the dollar value of the grain and livestock as income. Capital cost allowance could be claimed on the full cost of the combine.

Q. What may I claim on my income tax form as wages to my children for work on the farm?

A. Basically, you may claim an amount that was paid to your child if the child performed work which would have otherwise required the employment of hired help. Also, the amount paid must be in line with what would have been paid to a stranger, the work done must be related to farm income, and the payments to your children must be properly vouchered.

Q. The farm I operate is about 10 miles from town. During the summer months we live on the farm, then move to town for the winter months. Can I claim on my income tax expenses such as taxes and repairs on our town house, for the portion of the year during which we live in it?

A. Expenses paid for the maintenance of your town house are considered to be of a personal nature and are therefore not allowable as a deduction for income.

Wallace Ready to Force Fight on Secretary Help

Serious consideration will be given to contesting the election of Speaker-designate Ed Smith unless the opposition parties get a clear commitment on secretarial staff, Conservative Leader Scott Wallace said Wednesday.

Wallace said Smith still has not come to a final arrangement for providing secretarial staff for the opposition caucuses and the parties have not been able to meet with him to discuss the question.

He said that unless Smith gives some commitment prior to the opening of the legislature next Wednesday another member of the legislature could be nominated to fill the Speaker's position.

Graham Lea (NDP — Prince Rupert) said he is hopeful the issue can be settled before the session begins but wouldn't rule out the possibility suggested by Wallace.

The new Social Credit government had proposed cuts in opposition staff.

Saanich Shows Building Surge

Building activity surged in Saanich during February with 109 permits issued for a total value of $7,118,965.

This compares to 48 permits for a total value of $1,003,800 issued during the same month in 1975.

The largest project started was the federal government's $3,211,000 mail processing plant at 4181 Glenford.

Sixty-five permits for single-family homes for a total value of $2,250,125 were taken out, continuing the spiralling trend. In February last year 29 permits were issued for a total value of $931,700.

In the first two months of this year 204 permits, valued at $10,967,790, were issued. In the same period for 1975 figures were 124 for a total value of $3,045,031.

Residential accommodation showed a marked increase, 124 permits valued at $4,225,025 being issued for single-family and duplex homes. In 1975 the figures were 61 units for a total value of $1,113,300.

Torture Movie Showings

The Victoria-area branch of Amnesty International, the agency which works for the release of political prisoners in the Soviet Union, Chile, Uganda, Spain, South Africa and numerous other countries, is arranging a number of local showings of a 90-minute color film entitled The Year of the Torture.

Made in Britain by Amnesty International, the film documents the brutal treatment meted out to people who have been jailed for their dissident views.

The film will be screened at:

The Student Union Building theatre at the University of Victoria at 12:30 p.m. on Friday; the Victoria Friends Meeting House, 1831 Fern Street, at 7:30 p.m. on Sunday; and at Pearson College near Pedder Bay, Metchosis, at 4:30 p.m. and 9 p.m. on Monday.

Amnesty International champions the cause of 3,650 political prisoners in 107 countries. It has 1,592 groups of 20 to 100 members scattered throughout the world. These groups can "adopt" — work for the release of — political prisoners only — in groups of three: one from a western nation, one from Eastern Europe and one from the Third World. This ensures a spectrum of prisoners is represented, to reflect Amnesty's concern with political prisoners in all systems.

Pearson College teacher Marks McAvity, who helped form the local group last fall, said its adopted prisoners are in Uruguay, Indonesia and the Soviet Union.

"The main thing is to try to indicate to the governments concerned that they should look at these cases again," he said. "We lean on the universal declaration of human rights and apply whatever other kinds of pressure we can."

GREEN ACRES

WITH TWO BEAUTIFUL TUDORS

Serenity in Beautiful Uplands

Large, landscaped lot with towering oaks and lovely fruit trees just ready to burst into bloom. A mature home, now extensively modernized and decorated to meet the needs of today's more demanding families. Three generous-sized bedrooms, all with good closets. One is a truly great studio-type bedroom with skylights and a walk-in closet. Three full bathrooms, too. Full basement, of course. The convenient kitchen has all new hardwood cabinets and the curved front, cove-back type of apron that ensures easy cleaning. Both the living room and dining room are entertainment sized, bright, sunny rooms that face the sea views. Oak floors and two fireplaces add further charm to this home. A large family room and a sunroom, both on the main floor are other amenities that qualify this lovely Tudor as a real "Family Home." An exceptional value for this like-new home, with offers to $125,000 and immediate possession. Financing easily arranged.

Picture-Book Charm on Cadboro Bay

A most attractive two-bedroom home. Truly outstandingly beautiful. Set well back on a large double lot, it is most impressive. The rear area is very secluded and private with a large garden section and two garages. The woodwork in this home is exceptionally fine. A lovely entrance foyer leads to a magnificent living room, 16 ft. x 23 ft., with beamed ceiling, paneled walls, a fine stone fireplace and a large bay window that looks out to the water views. The lovely dining room and convenient kitchen all indicate a home designed for both entertaining and for gracious living. An ideal home for the retired couple and their guests. Not too large and priced just right at only $77,500. Call soon, for this new listing will not last long. Good financing.

NATIONALS PLAY HERE

Victoria soccer fans can get a look at Canada's national team here on Saturday. Twice!

Yes, the Nationals have two games scheduled.

One is against the Victoria West club of the Premier Division. That game will take place at Central Park at 12:30 p.m. The other game will have the Vancouver Island Selects as the opposition at Athletic Park at 2:30 p.m.

The Nationals have been divided into two clubs for the occasion and naturally the Island Selects will play what is considered the stronger of the two clubs.

In addition, coach Brian Hughes of the Selects will have the services of three Island players from the Nationals—Brian Robinson, Bob Bolitho and Ray Telford. Robinson and Bolitho are members of the London Boxing Club side. Telford is from Nanaimo.

Other players Hughes can pick from are: Frank Woods, Kjeld Brodsgaard, Hower Anderson, Ron Thompson, and Garnet Moen of Boxing Club; John McGuire, Steve Forslund and Darryl Hooker of Vic West; Ike MacKay and Don Attag of Nanaimo, and Ken Ross and Dan Lomas of UVIC. The Vic West club will use spares for the three players on the Selects.

The games are part of a hectic schedule for the Nationals which actually will see them play seven games in five days, the teams being split for the games here and in Vancouver on Sunday, and it will be a basis for selection to the club which will begin a tour of Britain, April 10.

... to test nationals

Manager of the Nationals is Bill Thomson of Ottawa. Coach is Colin Morris of Toronto and assistant coach is John Buchanan of Vancouver.

City Girls in Clean Sweep

VANCOUVER — All three teams from the Greater Victoria area remained unbeaten in opening games of the round-robin portion of the provincial senior high school girls' basketball championship tournament here Wednesday.

Vancouver Island-champion Victoria Tigers won both of their "A" division games of the four-day, 16-team tourney, beating Burnaby Central 50-35 and topping Abbotsford, 60-31. Reynolds downed Vernon, 44-30, in the "C" division while Mt. Douglas won a pair in the "B" division, 50-32 over Trail and 54-47 over Mennonite Educational Institute, the top rated Fraser Valley squad.

The 16 teams have been divided into four divisions of four teams for two days of round-robin play that concludes today. The two teams with the best record in each division will advance to quarter-finals Friday.

Shelley Godfrey and Sandy Lewis were the big guns for the defending champion — Tigers. Miss Godfrey tallied 18 points against Burnaby Central and 16 against Abbotsford while Miss Lewis netted 15 and 19 points, respectively.

Rhonda Keller scored 20 points to lead Reynolds, while Marie Morrison placed Mt. Douglas with 14 points against Trail and 18 against MEI.

In other games, Vancouver and District-champion Richmond handled Prince Rupert, 57-33, led by Rhonda Good with 15 points and Jamie Alexander with 10. Luanne Hebb was high for the losers with 27.

Salmon Arm led Cranbrook 9-8 at half-time but opened up the second half and cruised to a 36-20 victory, sparked by Cathy-Ann Jameson with 20 points.

Chilliwack defeated New Westminster 49-38. Sue Peel was high scorer for Chilliwack with 20 points while Sue Henderson replied with 17 for the losers.

Victoria High will meet Dawson Creek and Mt. Douglas will play Penticton today to finish their round-robin play while Reynolds will play Prince Rupert this morning and Richmond at 8:15 p.m.

Lumberettes Stir Fuss With Player Additions

HAMILTON (CP) — Victoria Home Lumber, making use of a little-used clause in the Canadian Amateur Basketball Association rules, arrived here with a bolstered team ready to defend the Canadian women's basketball championship.

British Columbia teams have won the title the last two years and are heavily favored to repeat here in the three-day tournament that begins with round-robin play today and Friday.

The top two teams in the four-team divisions advance to the semi-finals Saturday with the two survivors meeting in the finale later in the day.

The Victoria team, however, has already stirred up a hornets' nest by fielding an entry supplemented by three players who performed elsewhere in the province during the season — Sue Hofer of Gail Klaver of Simon Fraser University, and Sherry Stevenson of the University of Victoria.

The seven other entries are club teams without reinforcements.

"I was under the impression that you couldn't pick up a player from another team," said Earl Begg, coach of the Ontario champion Hamilton Bobcats.

He said he wasn't aware of the situation until a week ago when the eligibility lists came in. B.C. first sent a list with nine players. The West Coast club then followed up with another roster, naming 10 players.

That's when Begg and Hamilton manager Ray Jones started checking around and then the Victoria club showed up with a third list, this one containing 12 names.

A check with the CABA disclosed that everything was above the table. Begg said the B.C. Basketball Association apparently registers as a provincial association, enabling the championship team to pad its roster with players registered with the association.

"As it is, Victoria is a tremendously strong team," says Begg. "They've got to be favorites to win the tournament. They already have three former national team members centre Mary Coutts, forward Angie Dobie and guard Wendy Grant on the team."

He said Mrs. Dobie quit the situation last year but if she decided to train seriously could probably make the Olympic team.

"I don't think the other provinces realize what is happening here," Begg said. "Apparently there is a loophole in the CABA rules."

Victoria is matched against Alberta (Edmonton TBA), Manitoba (Winnipeg St Vital Grade) and Newfoundland (St. John's Black Horse) in one division. The other is comprised of Ontario, Saskatchewan (University of Regina), Quebec (Montreal Station 10 Raiders) and Nova Scotia (Halifax Seniors).

Tennis Is a Family Affair

Like father, like son, they say.

And "they" couldn't be any nearer the mark when they're talking about Gordon and Russ Hartley.

Not only is 18-year-old Russ developing into a fine player like his father but he has also joined him on the Greater Victoria municipal tennis instruction program.

But there was a time when it looked as though young Russ had given up the game for good.

Russ, who began playing at the age of eight, quit for three years when he was 12. He is sorry now that he ever stopped playing and is glad to be back.

"I wasn't bothered when he stopped playing and put no pressure on him to start again," says Gordon Hartley, who has handled the municipal program for Victoria, Esquimalt and Saanich for 31 years. "What got him going was, well I needed an assistant and I asked him if he would like to help out." He did and now, three clinics later, he's a fully-qualified coach.

Last year, Rusty, as he's more often called, took over the summer-long junior program while dad went up Island to handle tennis instruction for boys attending the popular Team Canada hockey school at Mill Bay. He'll be doing that again this year and will also help dad run the spring program for adults.

That program gets under way on April 26 and runs to mid-June. Players get two one-hour lessons a week for seven weeks and have a choice of morning, afternoon or evening sessions. Details of registration will be announced later.

The Hartleys are expecting another bumper crop of tennis students and Gordon doesn't agree with any view that the tennis "boom" is over.

Two years ago, when the tennis trend was supposed to be sweeping the world, the Victoria program attracted 550 adults. Last year it swelled to a record 800 and Gordon Hartley doesn't see any cooling off this year.

Since graduating from Mt. Doug High School last year, Russ has been working and teaching tennis out at Edgar and Caroline Rhombert's Island Indoor Tennis centre in Central Saanich. But he quit that recently and, in the summer will play for the Racquet Club of Victoria in league matches.

THE TENNIS SCENE

By Max Low

Playing-wise, Russ Hartley wasn't such a wow last season. He did win the B.C. junior closed doubles with Scott Braley of Victoria but in Vancouver Island tournaments he was a bit of a washout.

In fact, Hartley's name doesn't appear in the top 14 men players listed in the rankings in the new Vancouver Island Lawn Tennis Association's official handbook, which is now available at all clubs.

But Rusty confesses his game has improved "about 200 per cent" and he's confident this will be a far different season for him.

This confidence showed in the recent Island Indoor Classic - tournament when he knocked experienced Tony Simmet, Island Closed champion last year, out of the singles and pulled off the biggest upset of all by combining with Ernie Cockayne to topple Canadian champions Tony Bardsley and John Fraser of Vancouver in the men's doubles final.

Funny enough, Gordon Hartley didn't see his son's big win. He couldn't make it but Rusty was glad. "I can't play when my dad's watching," he admits with a grin. "I try too hard to make the shots just right... and then I blow my cool!"

Racing to Honor Leaders in Sport

TORONTO (CP) — The first Sovereign Awards dinner to recognize members of the thoroughbred horse racing establishment in Canada will be held here April 30.

The awards ceremony to honor horses, jockeys, owners, trainers and breeders was announced today by George Frostad, prominent horseman and chairman of the Sovereign Awards committee.

He said purpose of what is to become an annual gathering is to bring together all thoroughbred racing associations in Canada so that leaders in the sport can be rewarded for their efforts.

CLOTH TALK
Peter George

By far the most popular slack fabric remains pure wool. It's warmth, variety of patterns and wrinkle resistant qualities make it the best all around material for men's slacks. Unfortunately, these qualities do not come cheap. As a consequence, wool is naturally woven into quality garments rather than knitted as man-made fabrics are normally used. They must also be dry-cleaned.

The types of woven wool cloths are fairly well known. They range from the hand finish of a gabardine to the soft nap of a full flannel. Many of these weaves have their own distinctive appearance. Most men will recognize twills, twills, tweeds, hopsacks or worsteds on sight.

Knitted fabrics are notorious for "bagging" and "picking"; although they can be marvelously crease resistant. They are machine washable. Because they do not hold their shape, well known manufacturers produce them principally in man-made fibres catering to the lower price market.

The pattern possibilities are greatly increased with knitted cloths. Most common are geometric and check patterns. You will notice however that many of the knitted patterns will look as crisp and well defined as woven patterns.

B.C. Team Loses In Wales

LLANELLI, Wales (Reuter) — The British Columbia Rugby Union team was beaten, 22-3, by Llanelli Wednesday night in a hard-tackling and rugged match.

The tourists' only score was a penalty goal kick by Pat Simmons of Cowichan. For Llanelli, Welsh Internationals Phil Bennett and Roy Bergiers scored tries, Bennett getting two, and Keri Coslett scored another. Bennett converted two of them and Clive Griffiths one.

Llanelli lost two players through injuries — scrum half Colin Thomas in the first half and Bergiers soon after the interval. Bergiers was carried off on a stretcher.

Skaters to Retire

EAST BERLIN (Reuter) — Uwe Kagelmann, 25, and Manuela Gross, 19, bronze medal winners in the Olympic pairs figure skating championships, have retired from international competition. The East Germans were fourth in last week's world championships.

Little cars should be seen not heard.

Being a specialist in the muffler business means you've got to know everything you can about putting every kind of muffler on every kind of car.

Today that's tougher than ever. It seems there's more cars in more sizes and shapes than ever before.

Which is why, just down the street from you there's a Speedy shop full of mufflers and pipes for most every kind of car. From Datsuns to Caddies.

And at the door there's a Speedy guy waiting with a smile and a head full of facts about how to get your car back on the road as quickly as possible.

He'll give you an exact estimate before he begins. He'll never sell you a part you could do without. He won't charge you an extra cent for labour.

And the free Speedy cigars are the same size whether you drive up in a Volkswagen or a Mercedes-Benz.

At Speedy you're a Somebody.

Crushed in Fights, Jets Win the War

By The Canadian Press
Winnipeg Jets moved an amendment to an old Conn Smythe dictum Wednesday night.
Smythe, who operated Toronto Maple Leafs of the National Hockey League, used to argue that "if you can't beat 'em in the alley, you can't beat 'em on the ice."
Wednesday night, Quebec Nordiques beat on the Jets at the end of the first period, but the Jets absorbed their punishment and went on to trounce the Nordiques 10-3.
The win all but clinched first place in the Canadian Division and over-all standings, giving them a 14-point edge over Quebec in their own division race and a 12-point advantage over Houston Aeros over-all.
In Wednesday's other WHA games, Cleveland Crusaders dropped Cincinnati Stingers 5-2 and Phoenix Roadrunners edged New England Whalers 3-2.

The benches cleared at Winnipeg when Quebec's Pierre Roy left the penalty bench to join an altercation between team-mate Bill Prentice and Winnipeg's Bobby Hull.
Fights broke out all over the ice with the Jets getting the worst of all of them.
Six police officers were called onto the ice to restore order after 25 minutes of hostilities. Police gave no indication charges would be laid although some officers lost their hats in the melee.
Referee Ron Fournier handed out game misconducts to Roy, Serge Bernier (who also drew three majors), Charlie Constantin and Gordie Gallant of Quebec and Lyle Moffat of Winnipeg.
With the brawling out of the way, the battered Jets scored four goals in each of the last two periods and so controlled the final period that the high-scoring Nordiques managed only one shot on goal.

Mats Lindh had two goals for Winnipeg, with Anders Hedberg, Thommie Bergman, Norm Beaudin, Willy Lindstrom, Bobby Hull, Peter Sullivan, Ulf Nilsson and Veli Ketola adding one each. Marc Tardiff scored his 60th goal of the season for Quebec.
The Crusaders, wearing black armbands to protest management policies and rumors that Kansas City Scouts of the National Hockey League might move to Cleveland, moved into a first-place tie with Cincinnati in the Eastern Division standings by beating the Stingers.

Boycott Threat Grossly Unfair

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (Reuter) — A threat by the 46-nation Supreme Council for Sport in Africa to boycott the Montreal Olympics if New Zealand competes has been described as illogical by Lance Cross, chairman of the New Zealand Olympic Committee.
The threat came from the council's president, Abraham Ordia, in a letter to a staff member of the New Zealand Herald. It was critical of New Zealand's continued participation in sport against teams from South Africa in the face of its race-segregation policies.
Cross said New Zealand is proceeding with plans to take part in the Olympics.
"I can't see the logic in a statement that if New Zealand competes, then Mr. Ordia's African nations will not. What about the other countries that have played sport with South Africa?"
"According to my figures, 26 countries have had sports teams in South Africa recently and 22 countries have visited 22 countries."
Bill Rowling, leader of the opposition Labor Party, said he would write to Ordia stressing that not all New Zealanders agree with the government's stand.
However, he added that a boycott would be grossly unfair to such top athletes as John Walker and Rod Dixon who "have been very careful in the way they handled the whole situation."

Hamilton Retires

VANCOUVER (CP) — Veteran goalie Don Hamilton of Vancouver Burrards has announced his retirement after 20 years of senior lacrosse play. Hamilton, 39, began his career with Victoria Shamrocks in 1956 and the next year he played goal for Victoria Cougars of the old Western Hockey League.

In 1960, Hamilton was traded to Vancouver and the next season recorded the only shut-out in Mann Cup history. Hamilton, a veteran of more than 300 games, will be a team director of Burrards.

GRID BIDS PLANNED

Groups from Nanaimo, Courtenay and Campbell River will be submitting bids to join the Vancouver Island Juvenile Football League at a meeting beginning at 11 a.m. Sunday in the clubhouse at Macdonald Park.
Nanaimo last competed in the league in 1969 as the Rams and played during the mid-1960s as the Redmen.

Campbell River Raiders played in the league until 1965 while Courtenay has been competing in bantam and junior bantam ranks for several seasons.
Anyone interested may attend the meeting.

Handball Coach

OTTAWA (CP) — Mircea Roman, director of coaching for Canada's national handball teams, has announced that Eugene Trofin of Romania will take over as national team coach.

BUNDLE OF BILLS FOR KELOWNANS

KELOWNA, (CP) — There's a bundle of bills in store for residents of this Okanagan city, now that the finance department has gotten around to sending the first utilities since a six-month strike ended Jan. 23.

"We have decided to send out all the monthly bills at one time with a covering letter of explanation," said Ken Ball of the city's finance department.

He expects the department to handle between 60,000 and 70,000 individual bills in sorting out the backlog. For those who have not been voluntarily paying their utilities bill, the total owed could reach between $150 and $200.

Ball said garbage collection fees were dropped from the bills because no garbage was collected during the strike by the Canadian Union of Public Employees. The strike left the 50,000 residents with reduced services for nearly six months.

Penalties for non-payment will start on the May bill.

No Firm Conclusions Attack Launched On Hatchery Fish Kill On Skaha Weeds

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — North Vancouver RCMP have ended their investigation of the massive fish kill at Capilano Fish Hatchery without discovering the cause of the incident.

More than 1.5 million fish were killed at the hatchery in October.

Insp. G. J. Davis of the North Vancouver detachment said in a letter to Greater Vancouver Water District officials that the investigation had failed to turn up proof of sabotage in the death of the fish.

"Tests conducted through laboratories and the examination of all facts, circumstantial and known, bring about the conclusion that sabotage can, in all probability, be ruled out," Insp. Davis said.

The RCMP also found no evidence that extra amounts of chlorine had been introduced into the water at the plant, and also were unable to establish that the chlorinated water exiting the plant might have backed up and caused the death of the fish.

Insp. Davis said that while "the possibility of carelessness" on the part of an employee could not be ruled out, there was nothing turned up in the investigation to indicate that the kill was the result of a criminal act.

PENTICTON (CP) — Lowering the Skaha Lake water level started Wednesday in the Okanagan Basin Water Board's attack on offensive weed growth along the lake's shoreline.

Frank Colclough of Penticton, chairman of the water board, said the lake level now is about midpoint between its low level of 1107.6 feet and its high of 1109.6 feet.

The level is expected to reach 1107.6 feet next week. The water board will cover the weed beds with special sheets to shut out light to prevent growth. The coverings will be weighted down in sandbags and will be left in position for a year.

ROADS, TRANSIT EYED BY VANCOUVER RD

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greater Vancouver Regional District (GVRD) wants to take over establishment of priorities for transit and highways from the provincial government, the GVRD board said Wednesday.

The board also said it was willing to consider operating and maintaining transit and regional roads provided satisfactory financial arrangements can be made.

The statements were made after the chairmen of the transportation and the planning committees said that top provincial government officials specifically asked for the GVRD's desires in the transportation field.

Doctor Suspects Barnier Sanity

VANCOUVER (CP) — Guy Jean Barnier, 31, charged with murder and with attempted murder following a lengthy siege in the Kitsilano area of Vancouver last Friday may be mentally ill, a psychiatrist told provincial court Judge Murray Hyde Wednesday.

Dr. Roger Whitman said he examined Barnier on two occasions following the incident and came to the conclusion that "the (Barnier) may be mentally ill."

Dr. Whitman suggested a series of psychiatric examinations to be conducted at the forensic psychiatric unit at Riverview Hospital.

Judge Hyde concurred that such an examination take place but not to extend for more than 30 days.

Barnier is charged with murder punishable by life in prison of Doreen Garbutt, 35, an office manager who was killed by a semi-automatic rifle.

Barnier is charged with attempted murder of Dennis Fea, 37, the branch manager where Miss Garbutt worked. Fea is in satisfactory condition in hospital after being wounded in the stomach.

Dr. Whitman said Barnier told him he was being constantly harassed by police.

"He (Barnier) said he was subject to all kinds of harassment over his inability to obtain Canadian citizenship, not only in Vancouver but also in Toronto and Ottawa."

Children 'Tossed Around' in Day Care Squabble

VANCOUVER (CP) — Pre-school children are being tossed around like footballs during a controversy about funding of day care centres and nurseries, says Kay Britton, a pre-school teachers' spokesman.

Mrs. Britton, B.C. Pre-School Teachers' Association president, said the government and special interest groups are debating on a superficial level the funding of pre-schooling in the province. "What concept will this give children as they are growing up about the value society places on them?" she asked. Instead, she said, both the government and other agencies should consider what type of day care would be best.

"The government has a responsibility to study the situation from all angles," she said.

"They should look to other sources for models and consider the possibility of giving the funding straight to pre-school centres or of paying teachers' salaries directly and giving the centres lower rates of subsidy.

"They should also consider funding pre-school education the same way they fund school education—out of general revenue, with a cost-sharing program with the federal government.

"Studies have shown the first five years are the years when a child learns the most. It's time we started paying more attention to these years."

She said current funding is inadequate, both in terms of the amount provided and the way the money is distributed.

Currently, parents wishing day care for their children must pay $120 per month or pass a means test showing they can't afford this amount and get a full or partial subsidy.

Mrs. Britton said the money squeeze means parents are being asked to contribute between $5 and $20 above the $120—"and for people receiving the full subsidy, they might as well be asked to contribute another $100. They can't afford it."

She said these people are mainly single parents or low-income parents who go back to school or into the work force to keep off welfare. Those who can't afford the extra money either have to quit work and go on welfare or put their children into substandard day care arrangements.

She said additional money from the government or a redirection of the current funds as she suggested could help this situation.

"We shouldn't be playing with our children through little threats to close centres or withhold services," she said.

"We should be working together to get the best pre-schooling we can for our children."

No Evidence Cubans Are Training in Guyana

GEORGETOWN, Guyana (WP) — False reports that thousands of Cuban troops are in Guyana are part of an international campaign to "destabilize" the country's socialist government, public officials here have charged.

Ten days of travel through this country — and of interviews with diplomats, ordinary Guyanese and citizens both supporting and violently opposed to the current government — failed to uncover any evidence to support published accounts that Cuban and Chinese soldiers have been training paramilitary forces here.

At least one report originated with an employee of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, an AFL-CIO-backed organization known to have provided cover for Central Intelligence Agency activities in the past, according to diplomatic sources.

In addition, supporters of Prime Minister L. Forbes Burnham cited "deliberate deception" on the subject by high U.S. state department officials quoted during U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's recent Latin American tour.

The state department officials said they were uncertain whether reports of Cuban troops here were true. "They obviously knew the situation here from their own embassy and wanted the speculation to continue," said one close adviser to Burnham.

The "destabilization campaign," officials here said, began in September with articles in the Brazilian newspaper O Estado de São Paulo alleging native Indian slaughter, property seizures and anarchy in hinterland settlements.

There were reports of Chinese and Cuban troops in outlying areas, and the visit of a Cuban tanker and three Cuban planes in January was misrepresented, according to foreign minister Fred Wills.

In an interview, Burnham attributed the alleged destabilization campaign to "some elements that see our relationship with Cuba as too close... who don't want to see a little country on the road to socialism succeed."

Burnham, 53, an avowed socialist, came to power in this English-speaking coastal country with covert U.S. and British help in 1964. He is trying to install a system he calls "co-operative socialism" among the black and East Indian population by a steady process of nationalization that has earned him the so-called "critical support" of his long-time enemy, Chiddi Jagen, leader of the Marxist-Leninist People's Progressive Party.

Diplomatic sources said one of the reports most damaging to Burnham's government, an article in the March 1 issue of the Venezuelan weekly magazine Resumen, was provided to the Venezuelan embassy here in early January by a Guyanese citizen employed by the American Institute for Free Labor Development (AIFLD), a man named Patrick Tennesse.

Tennesse's account said 2,000 Cuban and Chinese troops had been running four paramilitary training camps in Guyana's wilderness, using Soviet and East German equipment and sending 3,000 Guyanese to Cuba for additional training. The article was transmitted to the Venezuelan Foreign Ministry, where it was apparently leaked to the conservative editor of Resumen, Jorge Olavarria.

Tennesse, in his early 50s and a resident of Georgetown for the past 25 years, is known to local journalists as a long-time opponent of Burnham. He is of East India descent, as are more than half of Guyana's 700,000 people, and according to the journalists he frequently attends labor-related meetings out of the area.

The institute, which has received more than $11 million in contracts from the Agency for International Development since 1963 for strengthening labor organizations throughout Latin America, has provided cover for CIA operations in Uruguay in past years, according to U.S. state department sources outside Guyana. There is no evidence that Tennesse is linked to the CIA directly.

The National Service camp at Kimbia, 160 miles south-southeast of Georgetown on the Berbice River, is one of the hot, desolate camps described in Tennesse's account.

A visit there last week found 1,200 Guyanese teenagers undergoing voluntary paramilitary basic training, classes in Guyanese history and culture and instruction in the co-operative socialist doctrine of international non-alignment preached by Burnham's People's National Congress party.

Classes in the echoing, breezy, barracks-like buildings alternated with sweaty work in the camp's struggling cotton and vegetable crop areas and in the chicken and pig-raising projects aimed at creating a focus for future wilderness settlements.

The paramilitary training, said director general Norman McLean, was designed to provide a national reserve force "with a framework of training on which you can build very rapidly if you need it."

Informed that international rumor had the place crawling with Cuban and Chinese troops, a group of young trainees lit up with delighted surprise. "Yeah? Wow, that's great," they said, and laughed. There was no evidence of any foreign troop presence, and submachine guns used in the rugged parade drill were Second World War vintage of British manufacture.

There is universal agreement that accounts of large numbers of Cuban troops now in Guyana are false. Several sources, however, pinpointed three military flights, one en route to Africa and two returning, that have stopped at Guyana's Timehri Airport since January past authorizing regular passenger flights to Conary, Guinea, permitted these flights, according to Foreign Minister Wills. He confirmed construction of a jet fuel depot at Timehri, but called reports that link it to any planned Cuban airlift to Angola "deliberate and wicked."

Many sources mentioned the January arrival of the Cuban oil tanker 10 de Octubre, which steamed up the Demerara River 67 miles to Linden where it unloaded two collapsible oil storage tanks and two oil transport trucks. The tanks, of approximately 150,000-barrel capacity, were hauled overland back downriver for installation at Timehri, which has no dock-crane facilities.

The tanker discharged its oil at Linden into the two trucks, which carried it back to the tanks, and the tanker then departed. The Cubans, Wills said, obtained authorization to establish the storage dump after Texaco refused, at U.S. state department urging, to supply fuel to Cuban planes. One, downed at Timehri with engine trouble, was unable to leave until the fuel-tank installation was completed, other sources said.

"No Cuban personnel were ever in charge of the dump," Wills said, "and that fuel is now part of our regular reserves — we use it for everybody, including Pan-American World Airways."

Other Cuban involvement here includes a shrimp-fishing fleet of nine trawlers. Jorge Barea of Havana, administrator of the fleet, said each vessel carries a crew of seven men, most of whom had been working the Cuba-Guyana run for about two years.

Introducing our new 3-door economy car

Arrow Hatchback

There's plenty of news at your Dodge and Plymouth dealer's. First, there's Arrow. It's a brand-new economy car with a handy hatchback door and a fold-down rear seat back. So even though Arrow is small and easy to handle, it can handle plenty of cargo. And with the rear seat back up, there's room and comfort for two additional passengers.

But being small, fun, functional and economical isn't all there is to Arrow. It's got a lot of class.

For openers, there's the Arrow 160. Well-equipped with standard features like tilt steering column, individually reclining front bucket seats and a peppy 1600cc overhead cam, hemi-head engine.

Then there's Arrow GS. A little more luxury for a very little more money. And at the top is Arrow GT with just about everything you could want going for you.

For extra power, there's a new 2000cc engine option. It's one of the most advanced, smooth four-cylinder engines going, thanks to revolutionary silent-shaft design. Power front disc brakes are standard with this engine.

There's plenty more to Arrow. And there's also plenty to say about the 1976 Colts, too. Like the great model selection. The long list of standard equipment. And the way they make the most of a gallon of gas.

But why not see them all at your Dodge and Plymouth dealer's. They've got a lot going, including the famous Chrysler 12 month unlimited mileage warranty. The first year's on us no matter how far you drive.

The new Arrow. Right in line with Colt. And you just couldn't do better than that.

Meatballs Merge With Pickles

March may come in like a lion, but it always goes out like a lamb. Perhaps this happy ending has something to do with the fact that March is Hamburger and Pickle month — has been for 747 years now! As part of the event, the pickle people have come up with all sorts of super-tasty, super-thrifty ways to put pickles and hamburgers together.

Pickle-Dilly Burger Cups is a new pickle-packed recipe to try out on your crew this month, or any month. The pretty bun-lets — delightful as a company dish as well as a family meal — are a new version of an old favorite, Shepherd's Pie, one of the many foods borrowed from Britain. Pickles are another. We think they crossed the Atlantic with the English sometime in the 17th century, and they've been part of North America ever since.

Start these Pickle-Dillies with a tangy chopped meat mixture, and add crunchy chopped dills. To form the golden crust, line a muffin tin with dough made from a hot roll mix; set a meatball in the middle of each cup and bake. Remove from the oven and add criss-cross cheese strips and bake a few minutes more till they are melted.

Serve piping hot, one or two to a customer. What a nice change from plain-old burgers and buns! Like leftover meat-juif they are delicious hot or cold as a quick lunch or dinner. Serve with sliced tomato, cucumber and lettuce and you have a good nutritious menu.

1 package (12-1/4 ounces) hot roll mix
1 1/2 pounds ground beef
1/2 cup finely chopped dill pickles
1/2 cup chopped onion
1 garlic clove, minced
1 teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
1/4 cup catsup

1/2 cup fine dry bread crumbs
4 ounces sliced Mozzarella cheese, cut into 24 strips

Prepare hot roll mix as package label directs. Cover and let rise 45 to 60 minutes. Meanwhile, in medium bowl, combine remaining ingredients except cheese. Shape into 12 balls. Place meatballs in shallow baking pan and bake in a 350 degree F. oven for 15 minutes to partially cook. Remove, drain off grease; set aside.

Grease twelve 3-inch muffin-pan cups. Punch down dough. Knead dough on lightly floured surface 4 or 5 times; divide into 12 equal pieces. Place a piece into each cup and pat to line bottom and sides. Place a meatball in each dough-lined cup. Cover and let rise in a warm place 20 minutes.

Bake in a 350 degree F. oven for 30 to 35 minutes until golden brown on the edges. Remove from oven and place cheese strips in criss-cross pattern on meatballs. Return to oven and continue baking until cheese is melted, about 2 to 3 minutes. Remove buns from pan and serve immediately. Makes 12.

FOOD OFTEN OVER-COOKED

VANCOUVER (CP) — For maximum retention of food nutrients, the British Columbia health department recommends cooking in a tightly covered pan with a minimum of water and for no longer than it takes to make them palatable. The department says many homemakers tend to overcook food and use too much water.

She Took Care of the Musical Mixups

elizabeth forbes

Podium missing. Harp left behind. Music forgotten. These near catastrophes, and many others, were quietly and efficiently avoided (or cleared up) by Lillian Smith, when she was personnel manager in the earlier days of Victoria Symphony orchestra.

That position included among its many responsibilities seeing that necessary equipment reached the concert stage, especially when the orchestra was appearing out of town.

"At that time, we were playing as far up-Island as Courtenay and Campbell River," she tells you "and when we travelled I also had to be sure that box lunches were available aboard the bus for the musicians."

The podium? It went missing at Duncan. So Jack Barraclough, then chairman of the symphony board, and a school carpenter got together and hammered up a podium out of scrap wood.

"They had it ready 'just minutes before the concert.'" It was before a Sidney concert that it was discovered Lorna Langley's big harp had not come out on the bus.

"We immediately put Lorna in a taxi, sent her back to Victoria for her smaller harp and she returned in time to go on stage when her number came up on the program."

Mrs. Smith first became active in symphony when Sara Spencer was head of the board and she continued her active work through the chairmanship of Walter Stenner, J. F. K. English and Barraclough.

She played in the second violin section of the orchestra from 1948 to 1966 and in 1950, became the first office secretary of the symphony society, when its headquarters were established on lower Broad Street.

In those years Hans Gruber was orchestra leader. There was no school of music here and no music department at the University of Victoria from which to draw musicians. So, the principal players, including the concert master, commuted from Vancouver.

That meant, as Lillian Smith remembers it, "a state of anxiety in the stormy winter months, until everyone had checked in for practices, or for concerts."

Here again, she was "in the thick of it" for as society secretary she handled the roll call and even wrote the cheques.

"If a musician did not turn up, he or she was not paid."

After her work as secretary and as personnel manager concluded, and she had retired from the orchestra, she remained a member of the board.

And, in that capacity, she took responsibility for preparing the printed program for each set of concerts until she left the board in 1974.

This dedicated woman's love of music and her unselfish desire to work with young musicians goes back to a time long before her involvement in symphony work.

It goes back to the 1930s when her husband, Jack, a talented organist, was a board member of Victoria Musical Art Society.

This society, then bringing many fine musicians to Victoria in concert and also developing the musical talents of many of this city's boys and girls, was in need of a sponsor for an intermediate group of young people, 15 to 21 years of age.

Lillian Smith accepted that challenge. Soon her work extended to a young adult group and to arranging concerts aimed at presenting all age groups in the society to the public.

During those days, and for a time after the Second World War, it was "the thing" to belong to the Victoria Musical Art Society and its many concerts featuring professional artists were very popular.

"That, of course, was before the symphony society and also the Hilker Attractions started bringing in outstanding artists," Mrs. Smith says.

"When that happened, our attendance did drop off. However, we still held up our heads, and went steadily on... and we didn't fold up."

After her husband retired from the board, she was named a member and went on to be president of the society from 1955 to 1960.

Today, she is still on that board, still helps to arrange concerts and is historian of the group.

Added to all this volunteer work has been an ever-present interest (from Canadian Girls in Training days to Women's Missionary Society) in program planning at Emmanuel Baptist Church where her family has worshipped since 1907, when her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Parfitt, came from Bristol, England, to Victoria.

She is a member (now honorary) and a past-president of Victoria Business and Professional Women's Club, where she is now planning her 30th annual spring Musicales, in which the club presents winners of musical festivals.

She has just retired, after 20 years, from the board of management of Rose Manor, a home for elderly women, where again her main work was to plan and present entertainment programs.

And she belongs to an ensemble — violin, accordion, saxophone, trumpet — that plays at Silver Threads centres, hospitals and at Rose Manor.

For the past several months Mrs. Smith has been gradually phasing out many of her long-time responsibilities to give more time to husband Jack, now in extended care at a private hospital and to her many great-nieces and nephews.

Recently she was honored at a dinner in the private dining room at the Union Club where 45 relatives, old friends and members of various groups in which she has done volunteer work were present.

The affair was arranged by Molly Watts of the Musical Art Society and Doug Abbott of the symphony society.

Among those present was Hans Gruber, who came from Toronto just for the dinner party, as well as J. F. K. English and Dr. Hugh McLeod, who had officiated at Jack and Lillian Smith's wedding many years ago.

A message was read from Jack Barraclough, now in Hawaii.

During the evening, Mrs. Watts presented Mrs. Smith with a card signed by all those present and a substantial cheque to be used "to make some special dream come true."

dear abby

A 'Secret' Father

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter, a 21-year-old working girl, is pregnant. She isn't going with anyone steady and doesn't want to get married right now. But she is thrilled because she really wants a baby. My husband and I are also thrilled because this will be our first grandchild.

We will do everything we can for her and the baby. We'll even adopt it if she wants us to.

She wants to keep the baby and take care of it herself. She doesn't want to tell the baby's father about her condition because although he's single, he isn't ready to settle down yet. She doesn't want to see him any more.

What should she tell people who ask who the father is? If he doesn't pay anything toward the delivery and support, he doesn't get any visiting rights, does he?

Our daughter will be getting help from welfare. Does that mean she has to tell them who the father is? She would rather not. Also, does she have to put the father's name on the baby's birth certificate? — GRANNY TO BE.

DEAR GRANNY: Since the laws differ from state to state, have your daughter ask her case worker to answer her questions. And tell her to ignore the people who ask who the baby's father is. That's her business. And her secret.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married for 42 years, and two years ago my husband told me that he wanted to have his left ear pierced so that he could wear a little gold earring in it. I asked why. No answer. Then I told him that his wedding ring was enough rings for a man. Still no answer.

Soon I noticed that he had his left ear pierced and was wearing a tiny gold earring in it. We haven't had a happy day since.

I am 59 and he is 63. When friends ask my why my husband wears that earring, I don't know what to tell them. Even our priest has asked me.

If you or any of your readers has a clue, please let me know. — STUMPED IN MONTANA.

DEAR STUMPED: The only person who can answer your question is your husband. If wearing a tiny gold earring in his left ear has special significance for him, ask him what it is. And if he tells you, please tell me.

DEAR ABBY: My husband grew up in a family of kissers. They were constantly giving each other (and everybody else) long, enthusiastic kisses on the mouth whenever the occasion arose.

I have asked my husband not to kiss our pre-teen daughters this way, and he thinks I am strange for feeling as I do. Abby, I have absolutely no objection to kissing friends and relatives on the cheek, but I save my mouth-to-mouth kisses for my husband.

When he kissed a young woman friend of mine on the lips last evening as a friendly greeting, she looked embarrassed. When I mentioned it to him later, he said, "Nonsense! It's time you shook your Victorian morals and joined the modern world."

Where do you stand, Abby? — STIFF UPPER LIP.

DEAR STIFF: With you. The mouth is an erogenous zone, reserved for one's lover — or for mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

Apple-Cherry Crumble

3 or 4 large cooking apples, sliced
2 or 3 cups sour cherries, pitted
1/2 teaspoon cinnamon

1/2 cup water or juice
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
1 cup sugar
1 cup flour, scant
Pinch salt
1/2 cup butter

Arrange apple slices and cherries in shallow buttered baking dish. Sprinkle with cinnamon and water and lemon rind. Combine sugar, flour, salt and butter, working until crumbly. Spread topping over fruit and bake at 350 degrees until browned and apples are tender, about 35 to 45 minutes. Serve warm with sour cream on the side. This dish is good with canned apples and cherries when fresh fruit is not available, or you can combine apples with half as many fresh cranberries.

Kids, Cooking Compatible, Says Expert

By WILLIAM RICE

Having been a child herself, and having prepared food then and ever since, Colette Rossant feels strongly that children and cooking are mutually compatible. "Young people like to cook," she says firmly.

Her statement is not mere theory. For six years the French-born New Yorker has conducted classes for children in her home. She also did a series with child cooks for public television, called "Zee Cooking School."

More recently she has compiled a book of techniques and recipes called "Cooking with Colette" (Scrivener's, $7.95). It is, in the author's words, "Step number one" for "beginners of all ages."

"It is not a textbook. It is not really a recipe book either, in that I have not waded a magic wand and invented something. I am teaching how to do classic recipes fast and economically. I have simplified techniques for the beginner without going to expedients that would not give you a good meal. It is not upper gourmet. You can go on to that later."

There is a touch of the exotic in Rossant's background. She is half-French and half-Egyptian, lives in one of the few houses in Manhattan with "a big garden," is married to architect James Rossant, one of the designers of the new town of Reston, Va., and has managed to raise four children while teaching French literature full time.

Yet she responds explosively (as she does when explaining the "art" of teaching children) if someone suggests that the French style of cooking might be beyond most children and a great many adults.

"So much mystique has been created," she says. "It is like an altar only a few can approach."

Rossant discovered cooking "by looking." Although she did some food preparation on country holidays and with her Egyptian grandmother, she first "learned" to cook by the self-help method as a novice wife in Munich, where her husband was stationed with the Army.

She went on to become a woman who "cooks well, but I am working from 9 to 5, so I don't have time to be fancy." The cooking school came about after a daughter was having trouble making friends at school. Her mother suggested she ask some children home to do a cooking club.

Word spread, and two 10-session classes evolved, one at the beginning and one at the end of the school year. "Eight students come before lunch, cook and eat one dish and prepare another to take home. I accept no child who doesn't want to do it, and I never do the cooking myself," Rossant said. "They do it all."

"We began with 8-to-12-year-olds, but as time has gone by they are no longer so young. I charge $15 a session, which means they must be serious, and the ones 15 to 18 or 19 are the ones who want to cook 'from scratch.'"

"They are in revolt. They don't want chemicals or prepared products; they don't like cafeteria food. Most of them at college now have a kitchen facility available, and they want to learn to use it."

She finds boys "not scared at all" of cooking. "They are methodical. They treat it like a game they know they can win." Girls, on the other hand, tend "to jump around and be fussy, to say, 'ugh, goooey,' when they are shown chicken livers."

Her youngest child, not yet 10, "likes frozen foods." A visit to the Burger King is the most important thing in his life. But she does not feel he, or other children saturated with desires implanted by television commercials, are lost as potential cooks or tasteful eaters.

"With taste distinctions they can get over fast foods very quickly," she said. "If they try a real, juicy hamburger or my chicken recipe, they recognize how much better it tastes."

In her view, few North American children cook "because often the mother, who is busy or tired from working, lacks patience and kicks them out of the kitchen. In homes and in school classes they emphasize clean-up; not doing anything that will make a mess."

"I did the opposite. I worked, but I missed my kids, so I would gather them about me in the kitchen and use them. If you ask them to do something real, they will get interested. Toy, utensils and ingredients won't work for long."

"As a child, when I made a salad, it was served without fanfare. But it was served and eaten. I hate that TV commercial where the children but together a convenience dish and say, 'Oh, I made dinner.'"

"There is so much talk of proper nutrition, so much worry about a balanced diet, about cholesterol and the quantity of good people eat. Yet they don't seem to care if the food contains chemicals, if it is old or frozen when it could be fresh. Still, more and more Americans are trying to cook better."

In her book Rossant stresses the importance of tasting to determine correct seasoning. "... recipes are only guidelines," she writes. "In the beginning it is best to follow rules; but, as you go along and feel more sure of yourself, think of ways to experiment."

She boldly uses garlic when garlic should be used, adds brandy to her pates and to some desserts. "They suggested we put note of 'caution' at the beginning of the book," she said with a scorn previously reserved only for salad dressings in bottles.

"It was ridiculous. Kids can eat garlic. Nobody gets drunk from a tablespoon of brandy. In real life, in the classes, kids never react against them."

An admirable degree of energy and enthusiasm shows through in "Cooking with Colette." Nonetheless, despite compact recipes and useful tips, there is a lack of continuity in explaining and illustrating techniques; a sense that the book has been not so much thought out and researched as written in the same spontaneous way that Colette Rossant talks.

Some recipes from the book:

SHAHBURGER

(6 Servings)

1½ pounds ground beef round
Salt and Pepper
Juice of one lemon
1½ teaspoons ground cumin

3 pita breads (little Eastern flat breads)
6 slices sweet onion
Fresh parsley
Sliced tomatoes

In a bowl combine chopped meat with salt, pepper, lemon juice, and cumin. Mix well. Make six hamburger patties. Broil them under the broiler the way you like them. When they are done to taste, cut each pita in half crosswise, and put halves under broiler till they are warm.

Open each halfway and slide in a hamburger. Add the slice of onion, surround your hamburger with some parsley and one or two slices of tomato.

ALAN'S SOUP

(Serves 6)

1 pound string beans
2 carrots, scraped
3 sticks celery, washed
1 onion, chopped
Salt and pepper

1 clove garlic
1 pound spinach, washed
5 cups chicken stock
1 tablespoon butter

Wash string beans and cut them in 1-inch pieces. In a heavy pot put string beans, carrots cut in pieces, celery cut in pieces, onion, salt and pepper. Cover with water and cook until carrots are done. Drain the vegetables; put them in the blender. Add a clove of garlic and the spinach. Add to the blender two cups of chicken stock. You can either make it from scratch or use one bouillon cube per cup of boiling water. Blend well.

Return blended soup to saucepan with rest of chicken stock. Correct the seasoning, adding salt and pepper. Put a tablespoon of butter in; when the butter is melted, cover the soup and refrigerate it for a couple of hours. Serve it with a leaf or two of parsley sprinkled on top.

This Casserole Colorful, Good

By MARY MOORE

Beulah W. wrote a happy letter. She said that my Swedish potatoes have been most popular. "I can't begin to tell you the number of times I've had to write out that recipe for friends. Now I have another vegetable dish which might interest you. It is called carrot and spinach casserole. It and your Swedish potatoes can both be made the day before and refrigerated — ready for the oven when the guests are due."

I had three coming for dinner on the evening of the day Beulah's letter arrived so they were that day's guinea pigs. This is colorful and good.

Carrot and Spinach Casserole

Vegetables
4 c. (packed) wafer thin carrot slices (4 large — see below).

1 c. sliced onion
4 c. hand packed fresh chopped spinach (or use two 10-oz. pkgs. thawed, fresh frozen).

Sauce

¾ c. butter or margarine
¾ c. flour
1 tsp. salt
2 c. milk
2 c. grated medium or old Cheddar cheese

1 c. dry breadcrumbs.

NOTE: When I sliced the carrots wafer thin I used my Feenster shredder but it is so sharp I hesitate to recommend it. If you do slice your carrots on it be careful — do not shred all of the carrot. Leave at least a 1" stub to prevent catching your knuckles.

Combine sliced carrots and onion and put on to cook in minimum of water (or steamer) and cook until tender.

Chop the spinach and put half of it in a large shallow baking dish. Cover evenly with half the cooked, drained carrots and onions.

To make sauce blend butter or margarine with flour and salt over medium heat then stir in milk until thick. Remove from heat and stir in cheese.

Pour half of the sauce over carrots. Repeat these three layers, pressing them down as well as you can and finishing with sauce.

Sprinkle top with crumbs. Bake at 350 deg. Fahr. 35 minutes. Note that Beulah says this may be made in advance and refrigerated. If so, I think it should be baked five minutes longer.

INDOOR GARDENS

DEAR LYNN and JOEL:
I'm having terrible luck with my rubber tree. I've done everything your book says, but all the leaves are falling off. Is there any kind of emergency treatment I might give it? — J.F.

DEAR J.F.:
Perhaps you'd better have it retreaded. Seriously, J.F., you plight is not uncommon. In spite of the fact that the rubber tree is one of your easiest-to-grow houseplants, requiring only minimum filtered or good artificial light and a minimum of water to thrive, a good many rubber trees are grown outdoors instead of in a greenhouse. And therein lies the rub of the rubber tree saga. If the plant has been grown outdoors, it might just not be able to make the transition. How to avoid this pitfall? Be sure to buy all your houseplants at reputable outlets.

Canned salmon is an undervalued food. Nothing is added to the can except a pinch of salt. Don't discard the liquid. It consists of natural juices and oils from the fish. Use it in some of your cooking.

The folder "Clover Leaf Salmon Recipes" ("Recipes de Saumon Clover Leaf") helps the homemaker discover new ways to use salmon in dishes which can be served around the clock.

In addition to recipes for hot dishes and mouth-watering salads, you will find suggestions for different salmon sandwich fillings. In one recipe, sour cream and exotic seasonings are used with the salmon; another calls for the addition of ripe olives and crushed pineapple.

The leaflet also offers easy-to-follow instructions on how to make fancy cocktail sandwiches, such as pin wheels, checkerboard and layered sandwiches.

¾ tsp. baking powder
½ tsp. salt
2 tsp. sugar
1 egg, beaten
1½ cups milk
3 tbsp. melted butter or shortening
Sift flour with baking powder, salt and sugar. Combine egg, milk, butter or shortening and add to dry ingredients. Beat until smooth. Drop by heaping spoonfuls (or one-quarter cup measure) onto hot griddle. Cook on one side until puffed and full of bubbles. Turn and cook on other side.

'Time Stood Still'

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Hundreds of pleasant memories flash through a person's mind the instant before violent, sudden death, University of Iowa researchers say.

"Time stood still," said a young woman who had believed she would die in a car crash.

"It seemed to take forever for everything to happen."

"It was very much like sitting in a movie theatre and watching it happen on the screen. The memories were pleasant, but made me sad realizing this was the life I was leaving."

Interviews with 104 people who survived near-death situations bear out the popular belief that a person visualizes much of his life when faced with possible death.

"Many described their emotional state as pleasurable and 23 per cent even acknowledged joy," the researchers said.

"Everything was in slow motion," said a race driver whose car flipped over several times at 100 miles an hour.

"It seemed like I was a player on a stage and could see myself tumbling over and over in the car. It was as though I sat in the stands and saw it all happening."

Seventy men and 34 women took part in the study by Dr. Russell Noyes, an associate professor of psychiatry, and Roy Kelti, a clinical psychologist.

The project included mountain climbing mishaps, near-drownings, automobile accidents, battlefield experiences, cardiac arrests and severe allergy reactions.

Although fear was felt early in the experience, most persons soon found themselves calm. Half reported no fear. "Once I realized I could not rescue myself, an indescribable feeling of calmness and serenity came over me," said a man who had nearly drowned 50 years earlier. "I have often wished desperately to experience that again."

Curfew Bid

PENTICTON (CP) — A motion to introduce a curfew bylaw was tabled for two weeks by council Monday to allow for community discussion. Under the bylaw, all juveniles under an as-yet-unspecified age must be off the streets by a set time. In Surrey, the curfew applies to person 15 years of age and under.

RATE HIKE EYED ON BORDER CALLS

OTTAWA (CP) — The Trans-Canada Telephone System (TCTS) said Wednesday it is seeking higher rates for telephone calls between Canada and the United States.

Under a new rate schedule proposed by TCTS, which represents major telephone companies across Canada, and American Telephone and Telegraph Co. (A.T. and T.), over-all Canada-U.S. long distance telephone rates would increase by 5.7 per cent.

Member companies of TCTS must obtain approval for the increases from federal and provincial regulatory bodies. Bell Canada and B.C. Tel must seek federal approval.

The price increases would vary according to the type of call, customer-dialed or operator-handled and the distance. Increases to customer-dialed call rates would extend to about 550 miles, while operator-handled calls at virtually all distances would increase, the system said in a news release.

In general, calls requiring assistance of an operator would increase considerably more than calls dialed by customers.

12-Mile Fish Limit Broken?

QUEEN CHARLOTTE CITY (CP) — Officials are trying to find a boat which had a net-tracking radio transmitter that was found washed up on a beach northwest of here, Doug MacIntyre, island supervisor for the Federal Fisheries Department Service, said Wednesday.

MacIntyre said that if that is determined, the boat will be kept under surveillance.

The device is used by foreign fishing fleets off the Queen Charlotte Islands and the find has led to suspicions that at least one foreign boat might have fished inside the 12-mile territorial limit.

MacIntyre said the transmitter would be sent to Vancouver for further examination.

The foreign fleet, composed mainly of Japanese, Russian and Korean ships, has been suspected for some time of coming inside the 12-mile limit," he said.

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Medical Association said Wednesday it opposes a new hospital at the University of B.C. unless the provincial government improves facilities and funding of medical teaching facilities in the major Vancouver hospitals.

Dr. William Ibbott, association president, said he was "frankly appalled the major teaching hospitals were not consulted in depth" prior to the announcement by Education Minister Pat McGeer that the university would receive about $50 million to help pay for the community hospital.

McGeer told a news conference the funds would be used for construction and for upgrading the other teaching hospitals associated with the university. He said the money would come from unspent federal-provincial health resources funds which must be used by 1980.

Ibbott said the BCMA was opposed to a UBC Health Sciences Centre acute-care hospital when approval was given by the Social Credit government in 1972.

Doctors Oppose New UBC Hospital

"We opposed it because there was no plan at that time for the up-grading of the major teaching hospitals," said Ibbott. "Our position remains the same."

The plan for the acute-care hospital was shelved by the New Democratic Party government later in 1972 in favor of the B.C. Medical Centre to be based at Shaughnessy Hospital here.

The Medical Centre concept has been rejected by the new Social Credit government.

Ibbott said the main hospitals remain "starved of capital funds" and doubling the UBC medical school will double the load on the 300 or so doctors who teach part time on a voluntary basis.

Gov't Overthrow Plot Claimed

SEOUL (WP) — Former presidential candidate Kim Dae Jung and 10 South Korean Christian leaders and academics are being held for investigation of charges they plotted to overthrow the government with "a people's uprising."

Minister of Culture and Information Kim Song Jim said Wednesday that if convicted the 11 people face a minimum of one year in prison and the possibility of death penalties cannot be excluded.

At liberty, but also under investigation for their roles in the alleged plot are nine others, including 30-year-old former president Yun Po Sun; former foreign minister Chung Il Hyung, 72; his wife Yi Tae Yung, the country's leading woman lawyer; Hahn Sun Hun, 75, a Quaker and life-long advocate of non-violence; Lee Woo-chung, president of a Korean churchwomen's group, and four Catholic priests.

Named with Kim as "the masterminds whose crimes are very bad" are four Protestant ministers, three Catholic priests and three former professors.

OIL EXPORT COST STAYS THE SAME

OTTAWA (FP) — The National Energy Board has decided to leave unchanged the export charge on crude oil exports to the United States during April.

The export charge on light and medium grade crude oil remains at $4.60 a barrel; on Lloydminster blond heavy oils at $3.70 a barrel; and on other heavy oils at $3.80 a barrel.

The export charge is added to the domestic wellhead price plus transportation for the maximum 510,000 barrels a day of allowable exports.

FLAB LINKED TO GOV'T BUSES

OTTAWA (FP) — Members of parliament, their secretaries and public servants might pass the "Fit-Kit" tests if they stopped using the government buses to ride the short distance from one parliament building to another and walked.

That suggestion was made in the commons Wednesday by Bob Brisco (PC-Kootenay West).

Health and Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde introduced the "Fit-Kit" program, which shows Canadians how to get into better physical shape and how to stay in that shape.

The federal government is spending thousands of dollars annually providing bus transportation, gasoline and oil, operating the small buses around parliament hill, Brisco pointed out.

He urged the government to consider constructing a tunnel from the Confederation Building to the existing West Block tunnel.

With such a tunnel the minister of health "can jog along with Mitch" and members of the staff working in the Confederation block.

That would save fuel and tax dollars and improve the physical fitness of the MP's and public servants, he said.

Car Pool Subsidy

OTTAWA (FP) — The Canadian government reimburses public servants who normally ride the bus to work, for the cost of operating and parking their private cars during a transportation strike.

Treasury Board President Jean Chretien explained Wednesday that in 1965 the treasury board approved a proposal to reimburse government employees during a strike which tied up bus or subway services.

These employees also could be reimbursed one-half the normal vehicle operating costs for each person carried if they transported other government employees to work.

This is done to provide a substitute for the bus service and to encourage employees to establish car pools, thereby reducing the amount of traffic congestion that generally occurs during a public transportation strike.

Health Bill Closure Criticized

OTTAWA (CP) — A motion to limit second-reading debate on the government's plan to limit medical care costs met Wednesday with bitter criticism from a unified opposition in the Commons.

Government House Leader Mitchell Sharp, who introduced the motion that allows only five more hours of debate in principle on the controversial changes, told MPs he was reluctant to use the weapon.

But opposition members questioned Sharp's aversion.

Conservative House Leader Walter Baker said the government had been treacherous in proposing to duck out of its share of the medical care costs and now was adding to the deceit through the motion.

Baker promised the Conservatives would continue to fight the bill because, he said, without amendment it would be just as irresponsible on final reading.

The closure motion was approved by a vote of 105 to 72 with the Conservatives, New Democrats, Social Credit and Independent MP Leonard Jones, Moncton, opposed.

The bill debated for 11 days already in the Commons, would limit increases in federal contributions to medical care to a maximum 13 per cent in 1976-77 and to 10.5 per cent in 1977-78.

Guidelines Pinching—Retailers

By MARGARET FITON
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — If the anti-inflation regulations remain as they are, most retailers will be forced to live with the same dollar amount of profit as they had in their base year despite increases in sales, a brief from the Retail Council of Canada to the Anti-Inflation Board says.

James Bunton, a partner of Clarkson, Gordon and Company who helped prepare the brief said this is the only place where the principle of cost pass-through is not followed. He was addressing the Ottawa conference of the council here.

"Since most retailers have experienced a faster rise in operating costs than in the cost of goods sold, they are forced to apply a rule to determine excess profit which limits them to the amount of profit they had in the base year, he said.

Bunton termed this "very unfair to retailers." Investment analysts are beginning to recognize that application of this rule will have a very adverse impact on retailer's profits, he said.

"We strongly urge that the regulations be amended so that the retailer has the option of using either Rule A or B," the brief states.

"We believe it is only equitable that, irrespective of the rate of increase in operating costs, the retailer should be allowed to "pass through" his operating costs consistent with all other sector rules."

Most of the operating cost increases are accounted for by increased wages, the brief points out.

Bunton said he thinks the Anti-Inflation Board can be persuaded of the retail council's position, but it may take some time before the regulations are changed.

There is also a possibility of getting the interim pricing guidelines changed to allow a retailer to increase the price of loss leaders as of October 13, 1975 by more than the 10 per cent allowable under the current regulations, he said.

Some other changes in the regulations on interim pricing which would still be within the spirit of the guidelines might also be possible, he noted.

Another area where retailers may get some relief is in the calculation of excess revenue for the period including Christmas, 1975, Bunton said. That was an unusually good season for most retailers, and the council's brief asks the AIB to consider exemptions of excess revenue for individual retailers on the ground that it was "an anticipated event," as defined by the regulations.

However, Bunton pointed out that the AIB is under "heavy political pressure" to roll back some price increases, and suggested that retailers might serve their own interests best by "getting on the handwagon."

One way to do this would be by public endorsement of the anti-inflation program and advertising geared to the program, such as "anti-inflation sales."

The council's brief also points out that there is no incentive for businesses to increase productivity, since they cannot reap the rewards of doing so. It also asks that the board be given the authority to award a fair base period operating profit on an individual basis to companies.

A further request is that certain restricted expenses under the regulations, such as advertising, be considered as ordinary business expenses for retailers.

Chretien To Sue Globe

OTTAWA (CP) — Jean Chretien, president of the treasury board, has served notice he will file a libel suit against the Toronto Globe and Mail, it was learned Wednesday night.

It also was learned that the minister will seek damages as well as an apology for a story the Toronto newspaper ran about him last week.

On Wednesday, March 3, the paper published letters from Mr. Justice Kenneth Mackay of the Quebec Superior Court written to Justice Minister Ron Basford which alleged that Chretien tried to interfere with the course of justice.

Mr. Justice Harry Arnovitch said later the Chretien call was not interferences and Judge Mackay later withdrew his allegation against Chretien.

Italy's Mafia Probe a Major Disappointment

ROME (WP) — A few weeks ago Italy's anti-Mafia commission concluded its 27th session, winding up 13 years of investigations into the origins of the mafia designed to suggest remedies for one of this country's most pernicious maladies.

The commission's final report — which together with two minority reports is to be the subject of a parliamentary debate — was a major disappointment to many Italians.

For years there have been promises that the anti-Mafia report would include revelations of complicity by well-known politicians in Mafia affairs. The majority report glosses over most of the promised names, while dedicating considerable space to history.

This is not to say that the report by Sen. Luigi Carraro, a Christian Democrat and the commission's fourth president since its creation in 1962, totally ignores political responsibility.

Carraro writes that "the particular characteristic that distinguishes the Mafia from other forms of organized crime is its search for ties with political power."

But Carraro handles the problem very gingerly. This report often describes the Mafia as an "informal power" that has moved in to occupy a power vacuum left by an inefficient state. It ignores the fact that the politicians themselves have often sought ties with the Mafia.

The report goes very easy on the names of ministers and undersecretaries implicated in other anti-Mafia documents (hundreds have been published over the years) but never proven guilty.

The most recent name mentioned is Vito Ciancimino, the former mayor of the Sicilian capital of Palermo, whose implication in various scandals has long been public knowledge.

A most recent example of interference dates to the summer of 1972 when a Christian Democratic deputy from Palermo whose activities had been investigated previously by the commission was himself appointed a member.

The deputy, Giovanni Matta, said he intended to use his commission membership to defend himself and his friends. But other members of all parties resigned in protest, and, when the commission was reconstituted, Matta was no longer on it.

The tough approach was rejected in favor of a more general critique, a decision perhaps stimulated by the fact that two of the names that the Communists mention in their minority report are Giovanni Gioia, the Christian Democratic minister of the merchant marine, and Salvo Lima, under-secretary at the finance ministry.

The Communists' and socialists' minority report seeks to illustrate Gioia's ties to well-known Mafia and smugglers like Tommaso Buscetta, arrested in New York in 1970, and buider Francesco Vassallo, considered on of Sicily's leading bosses today.

Vassallo apparently received a large number of loans from a Sicilian bank headed for years by Gaspare Cusenza, Gioia's father-in-law.

According to the Communist report, Gioia is more or less the top man in the Sicilian Mafia's power structure.

Plans are on view at the Construction Association of Victoria, the Nanaimo Construction Association, and the Provincial Planning Viewing Room at Vancouver, B.C., the Construction Plan, Services, Burnaby, B.C., and the Alberni Valley Construction Association at Port Alberni, B.C.
A certified cheque or Bid Bond in the amount of Thirteen Thousand Dollars ($13,000.00) must accompany all tenders. A Performance Bond to bind the tenderer in the amount of 50% of the contract price must be provided within fourteen days of a contract being awarded. This bond shall be approved by, and acceptable to the Owner and made out to School District No. 65 (Cowichan) as owners.
If the tenderer defaults in executing the contract within six days following notification in writing of the award of the contract, then said Certified Cheque or Bid Bond will become the property of the Board of School Trustees, School District No. 65 (Cowichan).
Tenders must be in the hands of the undersigned by 2:00 P.M., Monday, April 5th, 1976, at which time they will be opened in public. The lowest or any tender will not necessarily be accepted, and the Board of School Trustees reserve the right to reject any or all tenders without explanation. No tender will be accepted having any qualifying clauses whatsoever.
W. F. Brown, Secretary-Treasurer, School District No. 65 (Cowichan), 2670 James St., Duncan, B.C.

Winds Force Morning Ferry Lineups

Early morning sailings from the Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen ferry terminals today left line-ups of trucks and cars waiting as a result of cancellation of late night sailings Wednesday because of high winds.
Traffic was back to normal by 9 a.m.
Winds between 32 and 40 knots and rough seas at Tsawwassen forced cancellation of Wednesday's 8 and 10 p.m. sailings because of docking difficulties. It was the same situation at Swartz Bay.

A ferry which started her run from Tsawwassen at 6:30 p.m. took until 9:35 for a run which normally takes one hour and 40 minutes.
All Gulf Island sailings from both terminals were cancelled, so were the 8:45 and 11 p.m. sailings from Departure and Horseshoe Bays.

Winds caused a power failure which delayed the 4 p.m. sailing from Kelsey Bay for three hours.
In Active Pass, northwest-erlies blew at 50 knots around 6 p.m., whipping up heavy swells and rough seas.

Near Nanaimo, the strong winds complicated efforts to help the 100-foot herring packer Nahmint after her steering gear broke down Wednesday afternoon.
A passing fishboat put a line aboard the Nahmint as she wallowed helplessly near Five Fingers Island, roughly 1½ miles outside Departure Bay.

But the 50-knot winds snapped the line. Finally the tug Sea Comet arrived on the scene and towed the Nahmint to safety.
Also towed into safety after engine failure on Wednesday was the fishboat Tacony. She was rescued by the Canadian coast guard cutter Ready and taken into Nanose Bay.

FASHION FLASHBACK

Something different and intriguing in fashion shows will be presented Saturday at The Belfry, Gladstone and Fernwood.
Ivan Sayers of the Vancouver Centennial Museum, the designer of the costumes for the movie, McCabe and Mrs. Miller, has arranged and designed the showing of Art Deco fashions.
Featured will be more than 40 formal and informal garments and jewelry for men and women of the period of the 1920s and 30s. Among them are Paris designer fashions and home-made creations.

This is the show that opened the national Art Deco show that toured Canada last fall.
Starting time is 8:30 p.m. and admission is $1.50 general, pensioners free.

School Picket Case May 4

The Greater Victoria School Board and the Canadian Union of Public Employees will meet in B.C. Supreme Court in Vancouver, May 4 to argue whether picketing of schools is legal.
An interim injunction was granted last year against striking CUPE members of Local 382, school board maintenance workers, which severely restricted picketing at schools.
A school board spokesman said today the board will argue during the court case in Vancouver on the expanded issue of whether school picketing at all is legal.

The injunction, granted March 25, 1975, by now retired Supreme Court Mr. Justice R. A. Wootton of Victoria prohibited the CUPE pickets from interfering with fuel oil deliveries at schools and limited the number of pickets to two per site only at certain times of the day.
In his ruling, Wootton said the Public Schools Act took precedence over the B.C. Labor Code and ruled that mass picketing of the schools was a disruption, contrary to the Public Schools Act.
A CUPE spokesman said today the union will be represented by a group of Vancouver lawyers headed by David Pidgeon.
The school board will be represented by Vancouver lawyer Jack Giles and his own lawyer John Wood.

REGION SEEKS MORE AUTONOMY

The Capital Regional Board is asking the provincial government for two amendments to the Municipal Act which would lead the way to more autonomy for regional governments.
Directors agreed Wednesday on wording of the changes they would like to see and their proposals will now be forwarded to Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis.
At present, community plans within a district must be approved by cabinet, as must zoning and sub-division bylaws effecting electoral areas.
The regional board would like to see the act changed to allow the province to shift those powers to regional government where a region can make a good case for the change.

Municipalities already have control over regulatory bylaws. Board chairman Jim Campbell once again complained about the region's bylaws affecting its electoral areas being delayed for months by "faceless bureaucrats" in the provincial government.
Twelve to 15 such bylaws are currently stuck in the provincial maze, some forwarded as long ago as last September, he said.

Serviceman Badly Hurt In Crash

A 19-year-old serviceman is in critical condition in Victoria General Hospital after his motorcycle collided with a dump truck at Douglas and Trans-Canada Highway on Wednesday.
Saanich police said Andre Adrien Roy of CFB Naden received multiple fractures and internal injuries in the mishap which occurred at 7:57 p.m.
The driver of the truck, David Angus, 35, of Hoy Lake Road, was uninjured.

Bureau Seeks Skills

The James Bay Volunteer Bureau is seeking people with skills to help with programs in the James Bay Community School.
The programs take place during the day and in the evening and range from crafts to sports to home bookkeeping. People with skills who would like to share or have the time to assist in any of the spring programs should contact Phil Rogers at the James Bay Volunteer spring programs.

Old Powder In Asbestos Test: Doctor

OTTAWA (CP) — A U.S. test that found asbestos fibres in 10 of 19 body and baby powders studied may have used old powder, a Canadian health official says.
"The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) tested 30 samples of these powders in 1972 and again in 1975 and didn't find asbestos fibres," Dr. A. B. Morrison, head of the federal health protection branch, said in an interview.
"We've tested these powders ourselves a couple of years ago and found no asbestos," he said. "The U.S. test may have used old tales."
"We're prepared to look at the powders again," he said.
The U.S. test was done by Dr. Arthur Rohl and Dr. Arthur Langer of Mount Sinai Hospital in New York.
Dr. Rohl told reporters asbestos fibres can cause mesothelioma, a rare chest and abdominal cancer, and can also result in the scarring of lung tissue and gastrointestinal difficulties.
He said the asbestos contamination was usually found in the talc used in the powders.

Residents Discuss Metchhosin Future

Regional planners want to gather opinions from Metchhosin residents at a workshop March 20 on how they feel their community should develop over the next 20 years.

The planning workshop, to be held at Metchhosin Elementary School starting at 9 a.m., is the latest in a series of meetings to tap public opinion in the so-called western community as the planning staff of the Capital Regional District drafts a community plan for that area.
John Marshall of the planning staff said Wednesday the workshop will focus on developing settlement patterns, agricultural lands and environment management.

Cabbies Want Boost in Fare To $1.20 Base

EDMONTON (CP) — City taxi owners want a 30-cent fare increase in their base rate to $1.20, Ralph Wiedman, general manager of Yellow Cab, said Wednesday.
Wiedman said starting the meter at $1.20 is necessary because of higher costs, especially if insurance.
The average cab trip costs $3 so the increase, which must go before city council, will mean a 10-per-cent increase in fares, he said.
Drivers average weekly take-home pay of between $150 and $175 and Wiedman said he's been short of drivers all winter because they cannot make enough money.

Winner Picked In Habitat Art Contest

VANCOUVER (CP) — Jim Moodie, president of the British Columbia Planning Institute was named Tuesday as winner of the open competition of the Habitat billboard art contest.
Nine judges, all professionals in communication or visual arts, picked Moodie's design as one of the three best from more than 800 entries.
Moodie's extrapolation of the Habitat logo of a symbolic man, shelter and globe, was just what the judges wanted, said Mrs. Hilda Symonds who headed the organizing committee for the contest.

After South had gone down a trick in today's deal, his partner — a lover of poetry — sardonically articulated the words of Robert Browning, "God's in His Heaven, all's right with the world."

In his caustic way, North was trying to tell his partner that the latter had played the hand as though there weren't a worry in the world; and that if South had taken a few moments to reflect about the possible evil that might be lurking about, he could have relaxed later, as he luxuriated in the words of Bill Shakespeare: "All's well that ends well."

Opening lead: Two of ♠.
East's heart king was put up on the opening lead. South's ace winning the trick. South now mechanically played the queen of hearts.

after which he intended to lead a third heart and trump it in dummy. His doubled contract would then be fulfilled.

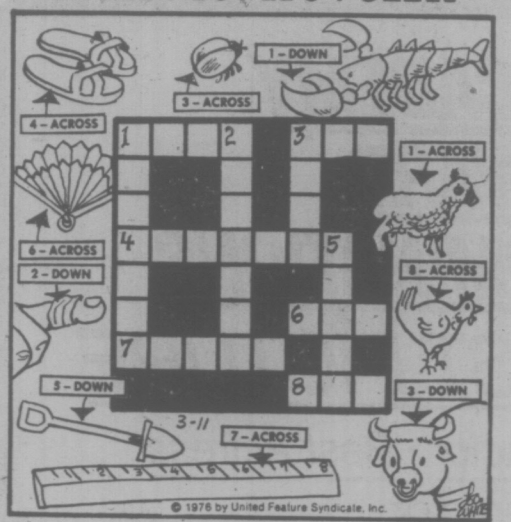

But West ruffed the heart queen at trick two. He then returned a trump, declarer taking the trick in his own hand. A third heart lead was then ruffed with dummy's jack of trumps, but South still had a losing heart in his hand. With the loss of two diamond tricks being inevitable, declarer incurred a one-trick set.

Had declarer paused to count his tricks before playing to trick two, he would have fulfilled his contract. In his own hand he had seven trump winners in addition to two hearts. If he could ruff out but one of his two low hearts, he would have his tenth trick.

Since there was a very distinct possibility that West's device of hearts opening lead was a singleton, declarer should not have attempted to cash the queen of hearts at trick two. Instead he should have led a low heart and conceded the trick to the defenders.

Assuming that a trump would be returned by the defenders (no other lead would alter the outcome), South would win the trick in his own hand, preserving dummy's jack. He would then ruff his remaining low heart with dummy's jack of trumps. The South hand would next be re-entered by ruffing a club, after which declarer would gather in the adversely held trumps. Ten tricks would now be there for the taking.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By SYDNEY OMARR

Friday, March 12

ARIES (March 21-April 19):

Get around obstacles instead of trying to run over them. Means avoid direct confrontations. Older individual may appear on scene and could slow your pace. Maintain balance and humor. Gemini, Leo and Sagittarius figure prominently. You get results after a delay.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20):

Study Aries message. Get footing on solid base. Deal with one who has good track record. Means stick with experience. Be aware of fine print, details — read between the lines. State views in frank manner and insist on facts, not fantasies.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20):

Relative or close neighbor confides problem. Money is involved — and a lease or cosigner would be at crux of dilemma. Be interested without becoming inextricably involved. Member of opposite sex is very much in picture.

CANCER (June 21-July 21):

Domestic adjustment is imminent. Make peace at home. Financial considerations, involving partner or mate, command attention. Be sure of legal status, including rights and permissions. Impeded cash flow is but a temporary condition.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22):

Accent on more responsibility, added pressure. See situations, people as they are, not merely as you wish they could be. Heed "inner voice." You'll be dealing with persons who want proof of sincerity. Pisces, Virgo could be involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22):

You get story behind the story, inside information, backstage glimpse. You'll be able to organize, to act with more authority. Capricorn, Cancer individuals could figure prominently. Take conservative course. For you, this is not time for radical change.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22):

Round out project — seek better display and distribution. You may have monumental task, but circumstances do favor your efforts. You have allies in high places. Know it, act with nerve, confidence. And do not bar romance!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21):

Accent on career, your ambitions, relationships with professional superiors, business associates. Say "Yes" to civic project. Relative with "sad story" can be made to see funny side and laugh. That would be a tonic. Know it and do something about it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21):

Money and distance seem to combine. Thus, travel or study plans could be involved. Consolidate — draw together allies, assets. Collect missing pieces, links. Cancer individual could play significant role.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be flexible in connection with requests from partner or mate. You may have to spend more to get what you really desire. Gemini, Sagittarius could be very much in picture. You uncover a mystery and a member of opposite sex is involved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lie low — BE A CAREFUL, shrewd observer. Accent on behind scenes activity connected with partnership, contract, co-operative effort — and marriage. You could be tearing down for purpose of revising, reviewing and rebuilding. Taurus and Leo might be in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get wish in connection with special service, task, employment. One who shares your interests bears glad tidings. Challenge is serious — but you are more stimulated than apprehensive. Gemini, Virgo could figure prominently.

IF MARCH 12 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY June should be your most significant month this year. You love food, you travel, are restless, scatter forces, have an abundance of charm and marvelous sense of humor — and a weight problem. Gemini, Virgo and Sagittarius persons play important roles in your life. You are going to be in better financial straits — very soon.

Seals Out of Reach of Greenpeace Choppers

ST. ANTHONY, Nfld. (CP) — Heavy Arctic drift ice carrying thousands of seals and stained with the blood of afterbirth is moving southeast off the Labrador coast out of reach of helicopters chartered by the Greenpeace Foundation.

The Greenpeace group was grounded in this northern Newfoundland town of about 3,500 Wednesday, awaiting settlement of a dispute about fuel supplies for their aircraft.

The Greenpeace, who say they plan to disrupt the Norwegian share of the annual international seal hunt off northeastern Newfoundland, were to meet today with the Newfoundland Fishermen's Food and Allied Workers' Union and representatives of St. Anthony residents.

Fisheries officers reported about 70 per cent of the female harp seals in two major herds have already given birth to their white-coated pups.

The hunt opens March 15 and the Greenpeace still are hoping to be able to reach the herds in order to confront the Norwegians.

The main seal herd was about 70 miles east of the Spotted Islands on the southern Labrador coast, moving southeast at a speed of about 20 miles a day. A smaller herd was about 40 miles farther to the south.

Both herds are expected to pass about 100 miles east of St. Anthony, which may be too far for the helicopters to reach without extra fuel.

Meanwhile, RCMP said here Wednesday they were investigating a complaint by the Greenpeace that federal fisheries officers had threatened to charge an oil company employee as an accessory if he supplied fuel for persons planning to use helicopters to interfere with the hunt.

A federal fisheries spokesman denied the Greenpeace allegations, saying no threat has been made.

Under Canada's Seal Protection Act, it is illegal for any person to land an aircraft within half a mile of seals or to tag or mark the animals without permission.

City Man New BCIT Governor

The provincial cabinet has named Hugh Weydert of Victoria to fill one of two vacancies on the board of governors of the British Columbia Institute of Technology.

Weydert, a business representative with the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, replaces Dr. Jane Hastings who recently resigned.

Rex McMeekin, a chemical engineer from Trail, was appointed to fill the other vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. Justice Harry McKay of the B.C. Supreme Court.

Both appointments expire July 25.

In other appointments approved by cabinet, Lisa Hobbs, an associate editor of the Vancouver Sun was named to the council of Vancouver Community College; David Helliwell of Vancouver, president of Steel Bros. Canada Ltd. of Burnaby, was appointed to the Universities Council; and P. R. Brissenden, a West Vancouver lawyer, and Ian Greenwood of Kelowna, general manager of B.C. Tree Fruits Ltd., were appointed to the board of governors of the University of British Columbia.

Mrs. Hobbs term expires Jan. 31, 1977, Brissenden and Greenwood's on Dec. 15, 1977, and Helliwell's on March 4, 1979.

Mandatory Seat Belt Use Backed

Pat McGeer, minister responsible for the Insurance Corporation of B.C., said Tuesday he supports compulsory use of seatbelts but its up to the cabinet to decide whether to make it mandatory.

He said the government has taken no side on the issue. "If you want my personal opinion, it would be desirable, but whether or not the public is willing to accept mandatory use is something I really don't know," he stated.

Statistics showed that seat belts reduced injury, death, hospital costs and insurance costs, he said.

Ontario has passed legislation making the use of seatbelts mandatory.

Vegas Lights Dimmed

LAS VEGAS (UPI) — A strike by musicians seeking higher pay turned out the lights at most major Strip showrooms Wednesday night, stopping an opening by Sammy Davis Jr. and threatening Red Skelton's first local appearance in several years.

Signs reading Show Cancelled appeared outside rooms at famed gambling spas represented by the Nevada Resort Association, leaving tourists to amuse themselves at the gaming tables or seek tickets to the few open shows at independent hotels and casinos.

The strike by Local 269 of the Musicians Union involved nearly 2,000 workers. Another 300 workers were involved in a companion strike by local 720 of the Stagehands Union starting today.

Neither union put up picket lines pending a decision by the powerful Culinary Workers Union, which postponed a midnight strike deadline after management requested another meeting today.

The biggest shows still going were Tony Orlando and Dawn at the Riviera and the Lido de Paris revue at the Stardust.

LOS ANGELES — Lindsay Wagner still doesn't know how it happened. One minute she was driving her sports car on Coldwater Canyon, the next she had crashed into a tree, the car demolished. Within those seconds a multi-million-dollar television series and her own acting career hung in the balance. A month later, she has returned to The Bionic Woman, her wounds healed, the series and her career saved.

It was the sort of occurrence television networks and production companies dread. The Bionic Woman, an offshoot of The Six Million Dollar Man, had premiered on ABC Jan. 14 and proved an instant success. Only four days later, the star of the series had her accident. With the luck akin to that of the Bionic Woman, the first person to arrive on the scene was a former ambulance attendant who administered first aid. The second was a surgeon who lived nearby who checked for internal injuries. Her head was split open, but the skull wasn't fractured. Despite a lip gash, she lost no teeth.

Filming was suspended for two weeks, then Miss Wagner returned to finish episode four. After another four days off, the regular schedule resumed. Fortunately, two weeks of Winter Olympics pre-emptions on ABC gave the series more time to catch up.

BATON ROUGE — A jury has awarded $55,000 to an Indian who claimed an automobile accident injury left him without the ability to hunt with a bow and arrow. The state civil jury deliberated about an hour before returning the verdict in favor of Vance Beaver. The suit claimed Beavers was hit by a Louisiana state police car, resulting in injuries to his neck and back. The award was against the state police's insurer.

NEW YORK — The pilot of a tanker involved in a Delaware River ship collision and explosion that killed 25 persons a year ago was cleared Wednesday of charges of negligence. X. J. Coughlin, U.S. Coast Guard judge, ordered the non-criminal charges dismissed against Sverre Sorensen, 58, of Morganville, N.J. The penalty might have been the loss of Sorensen's licence.

LOS ANGELES — One-time radical Jerry Rubin, now clean shaven and professing a new spiritual attitude, says the movement he led in the 1960s was immobilized by police infiltration. Rubin, 37, said many radical groups became closed and suspicious because of constant infiltration by the FBI and local police agencies and ended up "the same as the society" they were trying to change.

Escaper Admits Robbery Count

One of the 10 men who escaped from Wilkinson Road jail on Dec. 16 pleaded guilty in Nanaimo provincial court Wednesday to robbery and was remanded to Friday for sentence.

Glen John Glowa, 34, had been scheduled for a preliminary hearing on one robbery count, two of break-in and theft and two of possession of known stolen property. Instead, he pleaded guilty to the robbery count and the Crown stayed the others. Glowa admitted robbing Stan James of Cedar who lost his car and some money to two men on the morning of Dec. 18.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 26-year-old Sidney man with a record of 13 offences from mid-1967 to mid-1975 was sentenced Wednesday in Victoria provincial court to a 22-month jail term for eight more crimes in February.

Arnold Clifford Alexander Stewart, 9882 Third Avenue, pleaded guilty Feb. 19 before Judge F. S. Green to three Victoria and Sidney charges containing eight counts of break-ins, theft and possession of stolen property.

Police seized jewelry, long play recordings and numerous other items after searches of his residence Feb. 11 and 14.

Leslie Irvin Meng, 21, of 3202 Douglas, charged with Stewart in one Victoria break-in and theft, was sentenced by Green to 10 months in jail following a plea of guilty Feb. 17. The judge noted Meng had three previous convictions and had left jail only a short time before his arrest.

Pre-sentence repayment of $1,200 helped keep Glenn Anthony Couldwell, 19, of 475 Quayle, out of jail after he pleaded guilty Feb. 13 to an Esquimalt charge of break-in and theft.

Couldwell and David Scott Williams, 18, of 2761 Dewdney, who pleaded guilty Feb. 19 to the same charge, broke into the senior NCOs mess at CFB Naden Feb. 9, 1975, taking $1,200 cash and $215 in cheques from a safe.

Green fined Couldwell $250, put him on probation for one year and said he must attend a weekend work camp. Williams was put on probation for 10 months and must do 80 hours of community-service work.

A psychiatric examination at the Riverview institution on the B.C. mainland was ordered by Green for David John Carruthers, 23, no fixed address, who pleaded guilty Feb. 24 to a Victoria charge of break-in and theft and was scheduled for sentence Tuesday.

The judge was advised Tuesday that Carruthers had refused to talk to anyone while he had been in custody and had to be dressed, undressed and carried to and from court. Carruthers, an admitted panhandler, was remanded to March 26 for a psychiatric report.

In the court section of Judge Harold Alder, North Saanich resident Alvin Mark Williams, 24, of 10415 West Saanich Road, pleaded guilty to a charge of theft of 30 dozen eggs Feb. 16 from Oaks poultry farm, 880, Downey, North Saanich.

A stay of proceedings was entered for another man charged in the case. No reason for the theft was explained and Williams was given a conditional discharge with one month of probation and an order to pay $17.25 for the eggs. Only 18 were unbroken when police picked up Williams.

In the court section of Judge William Ostler, an echo of the Feb. 19 hostage incident at Wilkinson Road jail was heard when Dennis Matthew Wilson, 22, chose trial by judge and jury on a four-count Saanich charge of unlawful confinement of two guards and attempting to break out of the jail and its gym. A preliminary hearing date may be set Tuesday.

Ronald Leonard Frumerie, 34, no fixed address, was sentenced by Ostler to two months in jail followed by a one-year term of probation. Frumerie pleaded guilty to two Victoria charges — of a break-in with intent Jan. 6 at a business at 630 John, and of theft of 98 cents worth of candy Jan. 23 from the T. Eaton Co.

Ostler refused bail for brothers George Alexander Charlie, 22, and James Alfred Charlie, 23, both of 820 Figgard, who were charged with a business break-in and theft early Wednesday at 832 Figgard.

The older brother chose trial by county court judge and both were remanded one week for further hearing. During a bail hearing, prosecutor Peter Birkett said both brothers were on probation.

Albert Norman Laberge, 18, of 944 Tattersall, was committed to a higher court for trial following a preliminary hearing before Ostler of a Saanich charge of possession of MDA Jan. 31 for trafficking. Laberge has been unable to raise $350 bail.

Jared Edward Boudreau, 20, of 1925 Stanley, pleaded not guilty to a Victoria charge of using threats of violence while attempting to rob an employee of The Bootlegger clothing store, 1402 Douglas, March 2. Ostler set trial for April 20.

Yves Bourdon, 20, of 1325 Johnson, pleaded guilty to a Victoria charge of possession of about four ounces of marijuana Feb. 18 and was fined $100 by Ostler. Part of the marijuana was found by police who checked Bourdon at Fernwood and Pandora while the rest was at his home. Bourdon had a record of two theft convictions.

The only drink-drive fine Wednesday was $250 imposed by Judge Green against James Thomas Vancoughnet, 19, of 7090 West Coast Road in Sooke, who pleaded guilty to a charge of driving Feb. 28 in Sooke with a breath-analysis reading of more than .08 per cent. He was also ordered to take the impaired-driver course.

Crown Closes Case In Robbery Trial

The Crown closed its case Wednesday in county court in the eighth day of the trial of two men accused of armed robbery.

Judge Leslie Cashman excused the jury until later today while he dealt with some legal matters in its absence.

Robert Joseph Gelineau and Gordon Norman Comley, also known as Damon Gregory Horne, are accused of robbing the Gorge shopping centre liquor store April 12, 1975, of $19,000.

The last two witnesses for the Crown were Saanich detectives who testified about Gelineau's arrest in Vancouver April 17, 1975, and bringing both men to Victoria by airplane.

10 MILLION-YEAR-OLD HUMAN JAW FOUND

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (UPI) — A Yale university professor said today he has discovered a complete human-type lower jaw eight to ten million years old, considered by experts to belong to earliest man.

Prof. David Pilbeam told reporters his team of U.S. geologists and anthropologists discovered the jaw in the Plateau of Potohar in Pakistan's northern Punjab province. Pilbeam said the jaw contained a complete set of undamaged teeth, crowns and roots and represented the best such sample discovered so far in the Indo-Pakistan subcontinent.

The jaw was found in a village near the Khur oil fields about 80 miles from Islamabad. Pilbeam said his team also found more than 10,000 fossils of several other primates and many extinct mammals.

Pipe Bomb Found

VANCOUVER (CP) — Gregory Hans Dieter Baumelster, 19, was charged Wednesday with possession of a pipe bomb. He was arrested by the co-ordinated law enforcement unit which, acting on a tip, found a six-inch pipe packed with explosives and designed to explode when wired to a car battery.

Food
Prices
Ease
Again

OTTAWA (CP) — A continuing moderation in food prices held the rise in the consumer price index to three-tenths of one per cent during February, Statistics Canada said today.

The increase in the cost of living for the 12 months to February, at 9.1 per cent, was the smallest for any 12-month period in more than two years.

It was mainly higher costs for owning or renting a home, for clothing and transportation that pushed the index up for February.

Higher insurance rates for autos, dwellings and household effects also had a noticeable effect.

The moderation in food prices once again occurred largely in meat products as has been the case for the past three successive months.

Beef prices declined nearly five per cent in February, pork prices about one per cent.

Costs of dairy products except fluid milk declined as did price levels for fats and oils items.

Partly offsetting these declines were seasonally higher prices for fresh produce, while some cereal and bakery products as well as soft drink prices moved up.

Food prices are not directly controlled by the government's anti-inflation program, and their decline cannot be traced to the program.

However, it was announced this week that the anti-inflation board is considering bringing insurance rates under the program's control because of many consumer complaints.

Higher insurance rates were an important contributor to February's cost-of-living rise.

Housing prices for both owned and rented accommodation, together with higher electricity and gas rates in many Ontario cities, accounted for much of February's over-all index rise.

These costs likely will go higher because of the government's decision to raise the Bank of Canada's lending rate for loans to chartered banks effective last Monday.

BIG BANK ACCOUNTS MEAN CUTOFF

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

A Mincome assets test and tougher social assistance eligibility rules were announced today by Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

The minister said persons aged 60 to 64 applying for mincome will now be required to complete an asset or means test.

Single persons with assets exceeding $2,500 or married persons with assets greater than $3,000 will no longer qualify, he said. Assets are defined as bonds, bank accounts, mutual funds or property, but do not include a person's home, his first car or his household or personal effects.

Vander Zalm said the regulations will not apply to the 30,000 people in B.C. currently receiving Mincome but only to those who will be applying in the future. Persons over the age of 65 are not affected.

Vander Zalm also said employable persons living in designated low-employment centres across the province will no longer be eligible for social assistance.

"If a person wishes to move to an isolated spot such as some Gulf Island or remote mountain top... then he'll be disqualified from receiving social assistance."

"From now on persons moving to such areas and expecting welfare are out of luck."

He said his department is developing a map for the province which will designate low employment areas.

"It clearly does not make sense for an unemployed person to relocate to an area where there is little or no possibility of his finding a job."

The policy applies to transients and not to established residents of such areas.

Vander Zalm said he was disturbed by the number of persons who choose welfare over unemployment insurance even though they may be eligible for the latter.

He said measures will now be taken to limit benefits for those persons waiting for UIC to a maximum of two weeks. And, he said, "a new emphasis will be placed on existing policy whereby persons disqualified from receiving UIC are not eligible for social assistance."

Vander Zalm said persons who quit work or refuse employment will also be disqualified.

"People, who, of their own accord, take themselves out of the job market cannot expect to be supported from the public purse."

Former Premier Dave Barrett called the Mincome asset test "cruel and mean and a betrayal against the people."

But Vander Zalm defended the move, although he conceded it will probably generate "some resentment."

"It's not meant to be a police chase, nor a scare thing, but the changes need to be made," he said.

"People are using it (Mincome), wide open."

He said the test is designed "to close a loophole where a few people with $100,000 in a safety deposit box are collecting Mincome."

"Everybody should not be entitled to mincome," he said.

"It's not only a matter of income but also wealth. We aren't in the business of increasing a person's estate."

He said the assets test will give "a better deal for us from Ottawa — a better sharing on the return of money we receive from the federal government."

Any Gov't Pay Boosts
Mean Tax Hike: McGeer

Any future wage increases for government employees will be reflected in increases in provincial income tax, says Education Minister Pat McGeer.

"The only way a person, let's say, could get an 8.5 per cent increase... would be out of direct tax increases from the general public," McGeer said.

"All these raises that are now coming, which in the past have been more or less disguised in an expanding economy, will not be disguised any longer."

"There is a direct relationship between increased taxes to the individual and the amount that will be paid in the way of increased salaries."

The minister specifically mentioned salaries for hospital employees and teachers. "The economic cupboard is bare," he said.

McGeer said that if the province's economy improves in the next couple of years a different arrangement might be made but the state of the economy now is such that wage increases to government workers will be reflected in income tax increases.

Asked today what areas the government might propose to raise taxes to meet rising wage demands, McGeer said: "Well, you can figure that one out for yourselves... just look at the Clarkson and Gordon report."

The report forecast a deficit of $341 million for the current fiscal year ending March 31.

B.C. Teachers' Federation president Bill Broadley said today McGeer's statements were a "whole economic argument I think he's wrong about."

Broadley said McGeer's statement is based on the assumption that there will be no rise at all in provincial revenue during the year.

"The government is taking an attitude that there is no money at all available for general expenditures. They're doing it in everything — day care, resource boards — and education."

Beirut
Army Rebels

BEIRUT (UPI) — The Beirut army garrison rebelled today calling for the immediate resignation of President Suleiman Franjeih.

Shooting broke out throughout the city almost immediately.

The garrison commander, Brig. Aziz Ahdab appeared on television and declared a state of emergency throughout Lebanon. He announced a curfew was in immediate effect.

Ahdab called on parliament to elect a new president within seven days. The new president would have to form a new government immediately, he said.

The rebellion broke out within hours of an emotional television broadcast in which Premier Rashid Karami indicated he was resigning.

In his broadcast, Karami said Lebanon was a sinking ship and he knew that, "the captain, when he sees this, has to act in order to save the ship instead of leaving it to be tossed about by the wind. But I have remained steadfast until the last minute."

Syrian peacekeepers, meanwhile, returned to Damascus.

BATTERED U.K. POUND
IN HOLDING PATTERN

LONDON (CP) — The battered British pound remained steady today after Prime Minister Wilson said his government is committed to defending the value of sterling.

"We are determined to maintain the value of sterling externally as we are to maintain the value of what sterling is worth internally," Wilson said in a recorded British Broadcasting Corporation interview.

Bankers said the Bank of England intervened more vigorously to fight downward pressures on the pound which at mid-day stabilized at $1.91 U.S. after dropping to $1.9090 at the opening.

In Canadian terms, the pound rose by more than one-quarter cent to $1.8978 from Wednesday's close.

Confidence Vote for Wilson

LONDON (UPI) — Prime Minister Harold Wilson, shaken by a left-wing revolt and humiliating defeat in parliament, staked his Labor government's life today on a Commons confidence vote.

He charged that the government's defeat Wednesday night, by a combination of Conservatives, Liberals and Scottish Nationalists, with 36 of his own Labor leftwingers abstaining, "was the result of one of the most unholy alliances in the history of parliament."

The defeat came over a proposal to cut $10 billion in spending from health and social services.

The decision to stake the government's life on a confidence vote was taken at a cabinet meeting this morning — Wilson's 60th birthday — and presided over by him.

Arthur Latham, leader of 36 Labor party leftwingers who abstained on a vote on the government's economic policy Wednesday, said today: "We shall give the prime minister a nice 60th birthday present. We do not want the government to resign," he said. "We shall sustain it in the confidence vote."

Political commentators called the government's defeat by its own leftwing a damaging blow to its prestige.

"The government has been decisively defeated and discredited on a matter central to its whole economic policy," said Margaret Thatcher, leader of the conservatives, who called the defeat "unprecedented in modern times."

UVIC MED SCHOOL?

Education Minister Pat McGeer said today the provincial government is considering establishing a second medical school and that the most likely site would be the University of Victoria.

McGeer noted Victoria is the largest metropolitan area in Canada without a medical school.

He said space prospects for a person enrolling in a medical program in B.C. were the poorest of any province in Canada.

At present the only medical school in the province is at UBC and the government announced plans earlier this week to double enrolment from 80 to 160.

Dr. J. W. Ibbott, president of the B.C. Medical Association, said Wednesday he was "unalterably opposed" to the expansion plan. (See Page 27).

However, McGeer said the important objective is to maximize the use of existing facilities for medical students and students taking studies in other health programs.

PM Supports Drury Role

Times News Services
OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau acknowledged in the Commons Wednesday that people before the courts should not talk to judges about their cases or have friends talk to the judges on their behalf.

But, he insisted, the relevant question in Public Works Minister Bud Drury's admission that he talked to a judge about a case involving one of his cabinet colleagues is whether the minister "tried to influence the course of justice."

He accepts the word of Drury that he did not try to exercise such influence, the prime minister said.

Opposition MPs angrily denounced the government's repeated refusal to disclose what was said when Drury talked to Mr. Justice James Huggess of the Quebec Superior Court who was hearing a contempt of court case against Consumer Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet.

Ouellet was convicted and has appealed.

Meanwhile, Richard Holden, the prosecutor in the contempt-of-court case against Ouellet, said Wednesday that copies of letters from Judge Kenneth Mackay alleging cabinet interference in the judiciary came from his office.

In a telephone interview from Montreal, Holden said: "Richard Cleroux, a reporter for the Toronto Globe and Mail, asked to look at the letters, dealing with Holden's fee, which were written by Judge Mackay to Justice Minister Rob Barford."

Public Opinion No Justification for the Noose—Study

Times News Services
OTTAWA — While public attitudes have to be considered by a government dealing with the issue of capital punishment, "it should be kept in mind that uninformed or irrational public opinion is no justification for bringing back the noose," a B.C. criminologist said Wednesday.

Public opinion polls on the abolition issue "would have us believe the public is vindictive, retributive and bloodthirsty," said Essat Fattah, of Simon Fraser University, in a report prepared for the solicitor-general's department.

"On matters relating to crime and punishment," he said, public opinion "is determined by emotions shaped by the popular depiction of criminals in fiction, films and TV programs."

Basing himself on published opinion polls, Fattah isolates various conclusions including the following:

—The province of Quebec has generally reported a higher support for the death penalty than the rest of the country.

—Roman Catholics are less opposed to capital punishment than Protestants.

—Americans have always been less in favor of the death penalty than their Canadian neighbors.

—The better educated tend to be more tolerant in their attitudes toward punishment, and more opposed to the death penalty.

—The few psychological studies on the issue showed that supporters of the death penalty tended to be "people who are insecure, who were severely brought up and who are maladjusted socially."

—Authoritarian persons tend to be more punitive toward others.

—Supporters of capital punishment are more dogmatic than those opposed to it.

—Those opposed to the death penalty seem to do so on principle, regardless of its value as a deterrent.

Fattah's study, which leans heavily toward an abolitionist point of view also points out that public support for the return of the noose is a complex attitude largely unrelated to crime rates or fears of crime.

Fattah uses women as an example of how support for hanging was generally unrelated to fear of crime.

He says studies have shown that women support the death penalty less than men although they fear crime more.

He adds that there is less support for the death penalty among the young although more and more of them believe that violence is increasing.

Pro-hanging support has now swung back in Canada where it was in the Forties and Fifties when seven out of 10 Canadians favored the noose.

It had dipped to five out of 10, Fattah said, claiming the upward swing came as a result of a climate of political unrest coupled with the Quebec FLQ murder-kidnappings of the late 1960s.

A democratic government "should not simply reflect uninstructed opinion but should help shape sentiments to rational common ends, leading and enlightening public opinion," the report states.

All-Night Queue for Homes

EDMONTON (CP) — The 50 townhouses offered for sale in the Steele Heights area of the city by Pentaco Canada Ltd. all were sold within a two-hour period early Wednesday after prospective buyers staged an all-night vigil.

Dave Cornish, the firm's construction engineer, said when the office opened at 6 a.m. there were 150 people in a lineup. "I couldn't believe it."

The townhouses, each having 990 square feet with 1½ bathrooms, were offered at $35,995 each with many prospective buyers attracted by the prospect of receiving at least $80 a month under Alberta's assisted home ownership plan.

He added police were called, not because the crowd was unruly but because some people were waving their down payment of $1,650 in cash around in their hands.

Under the provincial plan, any two people can apply for a grant that effectively lowers mortgage interest to eight per cent. Two people get $80 a month and there is an additional grant of $62.50 a month for children.

WORLD JOBLESS HIGH

Barrett Missed His Chance To Be King Tut: Calder

NANAIMO (CP) — If Dave Barrett had provided sound leadership during his brief tenure he would have been king of the town, said MLA Frank Calder.

"Somewhere along the way he fumbled the ball. He is a good English rugby player but they fire fumbling rugby players don't they?"

Calder, MLA for Atlin, was the guest speaker at the March constituency meeting of the Nanaimo Social Credit Party.

One of his main targets was Barrett whom he said "is the laughing-stock of the nation. He lost his government and his seat. His beautiful opportunity escaped him."

Smoke Curb Eyed

PARIS (UPI) — The French government has proposed a bill to ban cigarette or other tobacco advertisements on television and radio and on posters in public places. The plan, to be submitted to parliament, would also eventually curb smoking in most public buildings.

GENEVA (Reuters) — Unemployment in major industrialized countries reached its highest level in almost 40 years at the end of 1975 and young people were hardest hit, the International Labor Organization said today.

Eighteen million people, or 5.3 per cent of the work force, were jobless in the 23 countries surveyed by the ILO.

That was five million more than a year before, and represented an increase of 1.3 per cent in the jobless rate.

In all regions, the percentage of young people out of work was almost double the overall rate and accounted for four out of 10 jobless.

Southern Europe suffered most, with 600,000 people losing their jobs there in the last three months of the year—as many as in the previous nine months.

The survey covered 18 European countries, Canada, the United States, Japan, Australia and New Zealand.

100 Flee Three Fires In Québec

QUÉBEC CITY (UPI) — Three early-morning fires within two hours of each other today claimed one life and forced over 100 persons to flee from a rooming house and an apartment building.

Investigators were uncertain whether the fires in the St. Rock and Limoulin lower income areas were related.

The worst of the three left a 25-room three-storey rooming house gutted. The badly-burned body of a middle-aged man was found in the basement.

More than 150 firefighters were called to the fires which, it was estimated, caused several hundred thousand dollars damage.

PM Backs Drury Role

Holmes, just back from a skiing vacation in Idaho, said he wants to make sure that nobody believes that Judge Mackay, a former legal partner, made the correspondence public.

He intends to prepare a letter to Chief Justice Jules Deschenes of Quebec Superior Court explaining the situation, he said.

Dechenes has been asked to make a report to the cabinet on the allegations.

In a related development, Treasury Board President Jean Chretien said Wednesday he intends to sue the Globe and Mail for libel over articles concerning his role in the affair. See Page 27.

In the Commons Wednesday, opposition cries of "resign" assailed Drury as he again refused to give details of his contacts with the judge.

This was the sixth straight day of Commons sittings where the question period has been dominated by the issue, and Drury is increasingly bearing the brunt of opposition questions.

Quellet has refused to comment on claims that Drury contacted Judge Huguessen on his behalf because, having launched an appeal of his contempt sentence, the matter is before the courts.

Conservative leader Joe Clark said the independent judicial system in Canada is "threatened" by the affair.

Carrying his criticism of the government to the airwaves, Clark released a text of a broadcast he was to deliver over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's Business program.

He urged Canadians across the country to write him and Prime Minister Trudeau "and let us know what you think about this affair."

Interference with the judicial system "simply cannot be tolerated," he said.

Canadians who had watched the progress of the Progressive Conservative leadership convention saw and heard a free and open party choosing its new leader, he added.

They saw "grassroots participation." It is the "kind of democracy" he wants to see carried on into the government.

He said Drury had admitted in the House that he did contact a judge who was considering charges of contempt of court against a fellow cabinet minister.

"Such an admission is intolerable. It means that the executive branch of government can and does stick its nose into the course of justice and it means that such intervention is 'accepted as OK' by the prime minister."

"Now if you or I took those kinds of actions with a judge in a case of some personal or corporate interest — we would be in hot water and rightly so. It should be clear to Trudeau that it's worse if a minister does it than if you or I did it. But Trudeau doesn't seem to see it that way," said Clark.

Egyptians Expelled

CAIRO (Reuters) — Libyan leader Moammar Khadafi has ordered the expulsion of 3,000 Egyptians from Libya in retaliation for the arrest here of 27 Libyans alleged to be involved in kidnapping plots and subversion, official sources said today.

the weather

The disturbance over the southern Interior is continuing eastward and passed onto the Prairies this morning. Skies were mainly clear this morning over most coastal regions as well as across the central Interior. This clearing trend will spread to the remainder of the province today. However another disturbance approaching from the Pacific will bring more wet weather to the north coast today spreading southeastward over the remainder of the province tonight and Friday.

A Break In Patty Trial Boredom

AN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Harry Kozol, long-time director of a centre for criminally dangerous sex offenders, took the stand at the Patricia Hearst trial Wednesday, and the prosecution promised he would be the very last psychiatric witness in the case.

Nothing could please those in the courtroom more.

Those on both sides in the bank robbery trial talk openly during recesses, in elevators, in the corridors, of their weariness of the psychiatric testimony that has taken over the case and prolonged it, and suspect the judge and jury feel the same.

Dr. Kozol, who resumes his testimony today, seems, like the other mental experts in the trial, to have come straight out of central casting for psychiatrists.

A diminutive, elderly, distinguished-looking man with a New England twang that varies from Harvard to Pa Kettle, he appears perfect for an Alfred Hitchcock thriller, one of those quiet fellows full of surprises.

Dressed in a grey suit with vest, he sat back in the witness chair Wednesday, drummed the fingers of his right hand on the stand and, bringing smiles from the spectators — even the Hearst family — with his New England accent, soberly explained his unique line of work.

Much of this work in the last 20 years, he said, has involved "upset young people."

Primarily, he said, he is interested in social violence: Why are these kids marching in the streets? Why are they blowing up college laboratories? I'm not condemning them, he said, But how did it come about?

His mixture of minutiae, folksy little anecdotes and tales of horrible crime, recited in a case-history style with an occasional aside ("I've gotten off the track") was, at least, more diverting than much of the expert testimony.

Kozol said he told the prosecution he would not guarantee that his opinion in the Hearst trial would wind up favorable for the government's case against her.

He said he wasn't any great authority on prisoners-of-war or long-term kidnappings; this despite the defence contention that the Symbionese Liberation Army abducted Miss Hearst and forced her into the robbery as a POW.

The doctor meandered through the triumphs of his life (like other expert witnesses), the flattering offers he turned down, his hard work (long days, long nights, early mornings), and told about his jail questioning of Miss Hearst: He learned quickly, he said, that she talked directly and liked to be talked to directly, and so he asked:

"Why did you do it?"

And she said: "They told me to."

Miss Hearst, the doctor indicated, did not like small talk.

New Thoughts Favoring U.K. Visit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House of Representatives — as predicted — is having second thoughts about its rejection of Queen Elizabeth's invitation to a 25-member Congressional delegation to go to London to pick up the Magna Carta for the Bicentennial.

The proposal was turned down 219 to 167 Tuesday when the House leadership offered it as a routine resolution requiring unanimous consent. Some members called the trip an unnecessary junket that would cost taxpayers $50,000.

In a 13-0 vote Wednesday, however, the House Rules Committee agreed to send the resolution to the floor for another vote, and the full House is expected to take it up — and probably pass it — next week.

The U.K. parliament has asked that 25 members of Congress go to London in May to take part in three days of ceremonies with the Queen, government officials and parliament, during which one of the four original copies of the Magna Carta would be loaned to the United States for a year of display in the rotunda of the capitol to mark the bicentennial.

CAN ONE OF CANADA'S MOST SUCCESSFUL INTERNATIONAL COMPANIES GET GLOBAL RECOGNITION WITH A NAME CHANGE?

YES. HOW?

By changing our name we are now able to market our products throughout the world under one corporate name. This means instant recognition no matter where we sell our products.

Before we changed our name we sold our products as Northern Electric in most of the world. But in the largest single telecommunications market of them all, the United States, we were unable to do so.

In the United States the Northern Electric name was already being used by a manufacturer of electrical appliances. In addition, a competitive manufacturer there uses the name North Electric. Obvious elements of confusion for customers, suppliers and investors alike.

To avoid such confusion we have changed our name to Northern Telecom; a name which projects more accurately the nature of our products and the world-wide industry we serve. It is the name by which we will be known wherever we design, manufacture or market our products.

Through our plants and offices around the world, we design, manufacture and sell private and central office switching systems, electronic platforms for satellites, coaxial cables for cable TV, data transmission and business and personal communications apparatus.

The majority of our products are conceived and designed by the more than 1,700 people at Bell-Northern Research, our industrial research centre near Ottawa. Many of our products have established world standards for design, efficiency, reliability and cost.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN TO YOU?

We stimulated the economy last year through the $330,000,000 we paid our Canadian employees in salaries, wages and benefits.

Educational and cultural activities were improved through Northern Telecom grants to organizations across Canada.

It means we shared the Canadian tax burden with the more than $135,000,000 we set aside for federal, provincial and municipal taxes last year.

Also last year we bought more than $300,000,000 worth of goods and services from other Canadian companies, creating additional employment.

Over the past 12 months we exported $65 million in Canadian-made products and in components for use in our factories outside Canada.

We're convinced that the future can belong to Canada — to all of us. But we have to earn it.

We're doing our part with this simple commitment: to improve world telecommunication systems so that all nations can better communicate with each other.

Cost $20,590 to Hold Seat In Saanich Riding—Registrar

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Candidates vying for the five seats in the four Greater Victoria ridings in the Dec. 11 election campaign spent a total of $188,619.03, figures released by the registrar of voters show.

Social Credit candidates spent nearly half, or $82,877.86, while NDP candidates declared election expenses amounting to $51,488.82, the Progressive Conservative, $25,539.89, and Liberals, $18,712.46.

Of the three independent candidates in the Greater Victoria races only John Craggs in Esquimalt said he spent any money — $149.94.

Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis was the largest single spender. His campaign to retain the Saanich and the Islands seat cost him and his party $20,590.56.

Sam Bawlf and Ian Rendle, who ran for the Socreds in the two-seat Victoria riding, spent $36,688.54 — more than the combined total declared by the eight other candidates in the race.

Bawlf topped the polls; Rendle came fourth.

In Esquimalt, Socred Lyall Kahl declared expenditures of $16,990.17, nearly half as much again as the NDP candidate Frank Mitchell, who spent $11,027.95. Kahl won the seat by a 129-vote margin.

In Oak Bay, car dealer Frank Carson, running for the Socreds, paid $18,605.59 for his unsuccessful bid to unseat Tory leader Scott Wallace. Wallace said he spent $13,201.71.

Among the NDP candidates, Carol Pickup spent the most.

total expenditures of $2,503.98.

The Liberals had the least amount of money to conduct their campaigns. The two Victoria candidates, David Anderson, seeking re-election as MLA, and Terry O'Grady spent $11,326.36. The election cost Edgar Rhomberg in Saanich $4,845.20. Leonard Stephenson who ran in Esquimalt spent $1,657.37 but Sarah Jameson, the Liberal candidate in Oak Bay, declared expenses totalling only $883.53.

Comparing the amount of money spent with the number of votes received, Rhomberg fared the worst of any candidate. His cost per vote worked out to about $4.12. At the other extreme were Burdon and Stanley — the 4,737 votes they received cost them in effect 52 cents each. The average cost per vote for most candidates was somewhere between $1 and $1.50.

Richard Kavanagh got the best deal of all. The 148 votes he received running as an independent in Victoria didn't cost him a cent. He didn't declare any election expenses.

Of the 23 candidates in the four election contests only William Scott, Victoria's "lighthouse philosopher" who ran as an independent, has yet to file a return on election expenses.

A spokesman for the registrar of voters said failure to file can result in a fine — minimum $200, maximum $2,000 — or in default six months in jail. However, he added, prosecution in the case of Scott is unlikely.

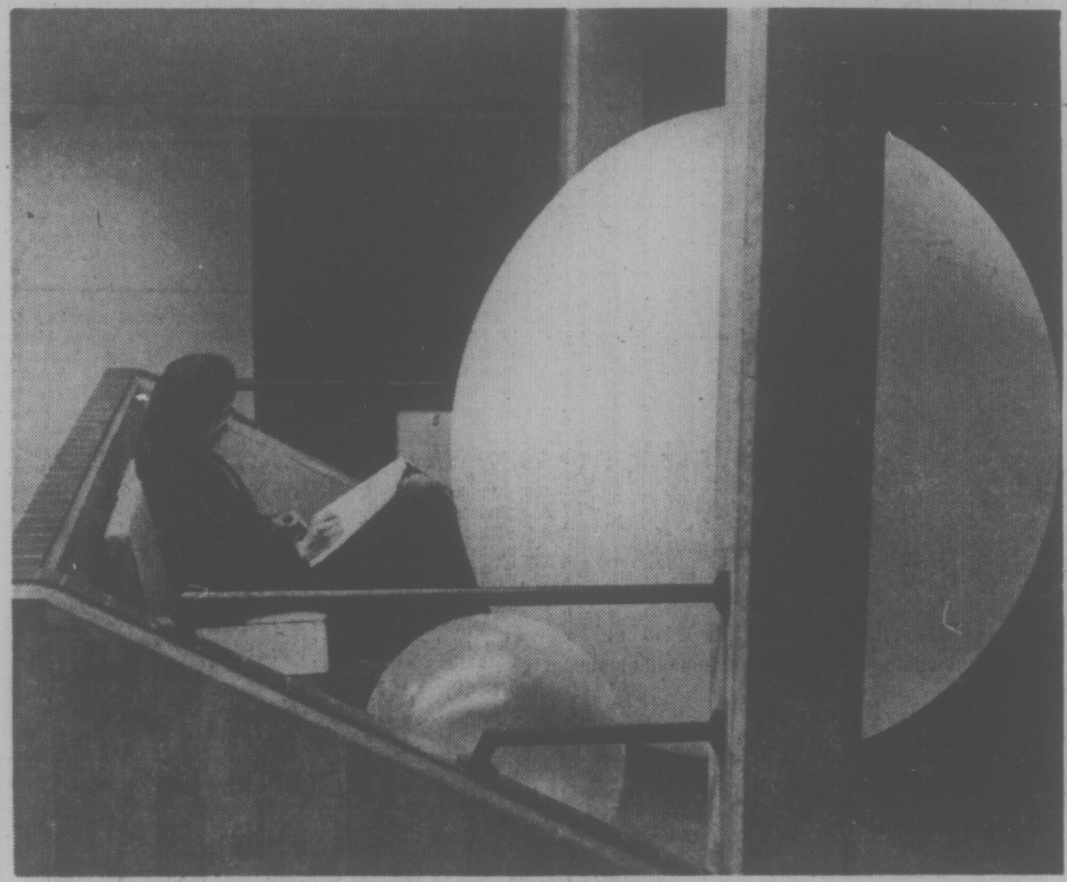

Around the province, the Socreds over-all party expenses totalled $794,984. NDP's were $342,481.

George Kerster, the political unknown who ran for the Socreds and defeated former premier Dave Barrett in Coquitlam, spent the most of any candidate in the province — $47,193.

But it cost him even more.

Kerster, in a recent interview, said his entry into politics was a contributing factor in forcing him to sell his car dealership, Surrey Dodge Ltd. The sale will be completed the end of this month.

"It's been worth it," he said. "Now I'll become a full-time politician."

UP, UP AND AWAY on a beautiful balloon goes the pop song, but Rick Smith, fourth-year Visual Arts student at the University of Victoria, seems too engrossed in earthbound studies. The weather balloons were apparently stored in the MacLaurin Building by a fellow-student who plans to feature them in a sculptural work. As they're a type of windbag, maybe the exhibit could be called Provincial Politics or Inflation Guidelines. (Bill Halkett photo)

Businessmen Plan For Centre 'Folly'

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

A plan by Victoria businessmen to help finance a convention centre would be economic folly, Mayor Mike Young said Wednesday.

He made the statement in Scottsdale, Arizona, after a day-long session with Scottsdale civic officials.

Young said a convention centre in Victoria would turn out to be a money-losing venture because most delegates would vote to go to a warmer climate for a winter meeting.

He said Victoria had to keep in mind the example of Calgary, not Arizona, on the convention centre issue.

"Calgary can only attract conventions in the summer months—when the businessmen don't want them—and the convention centre is idle for most of the rest of the year."

There would be a similar result in Victoria, under present conditions, he said.

"If Victoria could establish itself as a winter spa like Harrison Hot Springs, that would be different. Victoria must establish itself as a winter resort area before it can hope to attract conventions at that time of year."

Young said he could not support the proposal presented by him by Victoria businessmen just before his Scottsdale trip because "the convention centre plan would be a waste of good money."

The plan, jointly presented by the Victoria Chamber of Commerce, Victoria Visitors Information Centre and the Victoria Downtown Association, urged a one per cent hike in the business tax as a starting fund for the centre.

The chamber had been urging the construction of a convention centre here for several decades.

Young said the correct approach would be for businessmen to demonstrate they can attract tourists to Victoria in the off season through some kind of winter festival or promotion.

If this is successful, then they could begin to think seriously of sinking money in-

Radio Criticism Of Mayor's Trip Angers Charman

Victoria Real Estate Board president Eric Charman reacted with anger Wednesday night in Scottsdale, Arizona, to reports that Mayors Mike Young and Ed Lum were being criticized by Victoria radio stations for accepting the trip with the real estate board.

Charman told the closing banquet of the six-day seminar that the two mayors were in Arizona at the request of Scottsdale city officials as well as the real estate boards of Victoria and Scottsdale.

Young, Lum and 99 Victoria realtors spent six days touring housing developments and tourist facilities. The mayors also studied garbage disposal methods and civic budgets.

Scottsdale, a retirement and tourist city of 78,000 people, is considered a sister city of Victoria.

The mayors paid for their own hotel rooms (at $238 each) but the charter flight was pre-paid by the Victoria Real Estate Board.

The mayors also paid for some of their own meals, although there was no charge for banquets and other receptions which were hosted either by Scottsdale Real Estate Board or the Victoria board. The two mayors also received gifts from Scottsdale mayor Bill Jenkins.

Charman said he would be willing to answer questions about the trip if the subject comes up at this afternoon's council meeting.

Charman said it was embarrassing to hear criticism of the two mayors when so much had been achieved in terms of promoting Victoria and in learning ideas that could be applied on Vancouver Island.

There would never be any suggestion of criticizing Scottsdale Mayor Jenkins who accepted similar gratuities from his local real estate board in his efforts to promote his own area, Charman said.

"I will deal with this matter further when I return to Victoria," he said.

He did not name the radio stations in his speech but later he said the most criticism had come from CKDA while criticism from CJVI had been fairly mild.

Colford or Langwood Label For the New Municipality?

By DON VIPOND

Rapid growth and major building plans to the west of Victoria make it likely that a new municipality with its own government will be introduced there before long.

Regional directors from Colwood, Langford, Metchosis and View Royal will discuss the subject at a meeting with Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis later today.

A sampling of the views they are taking into the meeting suggests the new municipality might be called Colford or perhaps Langwood because Metchosis and View Royal seem reluctant partners.

Jim Campbell, chairman of the Capital Regional Board, advised directors of the meeting Wednesday and said that while he doesn't believe the region should be advocating a view, it had become increasingly apparent some initiative had to be taken if the growth problems in the western community were to be faced.

A committee formed by the previous provincial government to consider the question never got anywhere, he said.

Curtis sees today's meeting

MASSY
... where are the brakes?

The directors involved are Earl Pallister from Langford, Howard Drummond from Colwood, Mac Tipton from Metchosis and Pat Massy from View Royal.

"I think it's something we've got to have—and have shortly," Drummond said today of municipal government. He's amazed the area has remained unorganized this long.

Colwood residents now have little or no control over what happens in their community and the giant housing development proposed by Dunhill Development Corporation last month in the vicinity of Latoria Road is a good example, he said.

Municipal status would give a new council development control and growth would not continue "like topsy." At present subdivision approvals come from the provincial highways department.

Langford's Pallister, the veteran director, said he'll keep an open mind on such a move until he's seen studies of such things as the tax base available, operating costs and available grants.

"If it can be a viable entity, then I can be for it," Mrs. Massy of View Royal said she is left "a little bit depressed" by the whole business.

"I see an enormous metropolis out there and nobody seems to be trying to put the brakes on."

She has a feeling decisions have already been made on the future form of the western community, she said.

View Royal appears to have four alternatives — join Colwood and Langford, join Esquimalt, form a separate municipality or remain as is.

She senses residents favor the latter choice and it is her favorite too.

Mac Tipton in Metchosis believes some form of local government should come for Colwood and Langford but Metchosis should not be "lumped in."

Ask The Times

Q. A person has stated that elephants are afraid of mice because the mice get into their trunk and suffocate the elephant. Could you please find out if this is true or not and if elephants are really afraid of mice? B.R.

A. Our research indicates nothing to substantiate this claim of elephant suffocation. But the Vancouver Game Farm, the nearest elephant domicile known to us, assures us that elephants seem to fear any small animal, including deer and goats.

Q. Is it true that Canadian author Roger Lemelin wrote his first book while very ill. M.P.

Out of the Trash, Quality-Plus

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

With imagination and loving craftsmanship, quality can evolve from the trashcan as easily as from costly materials.

"It's wonderful," says Garnet Fay, turning over a rough oddment of lumber in his hands, "what lovely things can often be fashioned from scrap."

He is an authority on the subject, although he would never make such a claim himself. The irresistible urge to create things out of wood, metal, plastic, whatever came to hand, is the story of his life.

But as, he says, "I've always been poor," he has developed an extraordinary skill at making do with what he would obtain economically or by salvage.

At the moment, with the assistance of co-worker Diane Murton, Garnet is spending every spare moment constructing and decorating the stage setting he has designed for the Victoria Actors Association forthcoming production, No Sex, Please — We're British.

They work in a small, cramped warehouse at Quadra and McKenzie space almost every night of the week as well as Saturdays and Sundays. Visitors now and then walk in off the street to see what is going on.

Complete strangers, they ask questions, poke around curiously and go off saying they'll drop back to lend a hand, which they never do.

When they are told that all that careful, thorough work is for a play being staged at the McPherson Playhouse for five nights (March 16-20), they are stumped.

"They ask us why we put in so much time making a set that is going to be up for five nights," says Diane. "They think we're crazy."

Not everybody understand that insists the best way you can do it is the only way you can do it.

Stacked around the concrete-floored room are large flats, doorways with rich mouldings and ornamentation and artistically constructed specialty pieces.

The work is done from beautifully drawn plans and a model.

Set pieces have to be laid one at a time flat on the tiny floor space, for gluing, nailing and painting. The creators won't see the units assembled until they arrive onstage at the Mac this weekend.

The Actors Association combed the city to find a space with a ceiling higher than 14 feet in which the work could be done, and the set erected so it could be studied during construction from a practical and actable standpoint.

All they could find for their rent money was what they have where nine feet ceilings prevent the scenery units ever being stood upright.

Garnet Fay has been involved with theatre in Victoria for more than 10 years, working with the Naden Amateur Concert Society, Gilbert and Sullivan, Victoria Operatic, Theatre Guild and Bastion.

He has worked on the sets of many memorable productions but it was with the new Actors Association that he took control of design and construction, his first full creation being the much praised setting for last spring's hilarious Move Over Mrs. Markham, which marked the Association's debut.

Ottawa Jailbreaker Captured Following Siege in Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — Glen Thomas Landers, 29, one of seven prisoners who broke out of an Ottawa-area jail eight months ago, surrendered to police Wednesday after a three-hour armed siege at an east-end home ended without bloodshed.

Ottawa police confirmed Landers' identity by fingerprints and police here were awaiting instructions on what to do with their prisoner.

The Lancaster Street residence where he was captured had been under police surveillance before the capture.

In the June, 1975, breakout from the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Detention Centre, two guards were shot—one wounded. Three prisoners were recaptured immediately, including Barry Forsyth who was charged with attempted murder.

Wednesday's drama began when Lois Grant, Landers' sister, said she was apprehended by police as she left the house with her three children.

She said later that police then used a loudspeaker to order her brother and Gil Loubier, 26, the man she lives with, to come out of the house.

Mr. Loubier complied but Landers fired a shot to show he was armed and asked to speak with his mother. He also wanted Sun reporter Larry Still to conduct telephone negotiations for his surrender.

Outside the house, about 25 police officers and several newsmen and evacuated nearby residents. About 600 students at an elementary school one block from the house were ordered kept inside.

Special weapons squad officers took up concealed positions with high-powered rifles and an ambulance waited nearby.

Police then asked radio reporter Mike Dixon of CJOR, to come to a neighboring house to speak with the suspect by telephone. Mr. Dixon was asked to broadcast the surrender terms over the radio.

The terms were that the fugitive would leave his weapons inside, come out of the house with his hands up, and have pictures taken.

After coming out with his hands up, Landers was escorted to the neighboring house where he was photographed, and made a brief statement to the news media.

"The reason I asked that reporters be brought in is because I have to be transferred back to Ottawa pretty soon and the other people when they were arrested were beaten by the police and jail guards so bad they were unrecognizable," said Landers.

"I asked that reporters be here to take my picture because what I look like today, I want to look the same when I go before the court in Ottawa."

Asked if he had intended to hurt anyone, Landers replied: "I didn't intend to harm anybody unless I was forced to."

Police said two handguns were found in the house. No one was injured in the incident, the second here in six days involving a surrounded gunman. Last Friday, a man was arrested following a fatal shooting in an office supply business in the Kitsilano district.

Mrs. Grant said her brother had been living normally for the last five months, going out frequently and taking her young children to a nearby park.

Crowe Loses Appeal

OTTAWA (CP) — The Supreme Court of Canada today ruled Chairman Marshall Crowe of the National Energy Board should be disqualified from presiding at a Northern pipeline hearing.

In a 5-to-3 decision, the court agreed there might be a danger of bias by Crowe because of his earlier membership on the board of a pipeline company.

There was no immediate comment from the board on the affect the decision will have on its northern pipeline hearings, adjourned since early February when the Supreme Court case was begun.

However, although no one has said it will be used, a section of the Energy Board Act allows the replacement of a member at a hearing if he becomes sick or incapacitated.

Three public interest groups had challenged Crowe on the basis of his membership on the Arctic Gas Ltd. board of directors before he was named to the chairmanship of the energy board on October, 1973.

Second Tokyo Raid

TOKYO (Reuters) — Police looking for evidence of bribes paid by the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. in Japan raided the giant Marubeni trading house today for the second time in 16 days.

The raid concentrated on the No. 1 machinery division of Marubeni, the Lockheed agent here, which was in charge of imports of Lockheed TriStar jetliners for the domestic All-Nippon Airways.

Police sources said that they were seeking information which might identify top government officials alleged to have received Lockheed bribes, as well as evidence of tax evasion and violation of foreign-exchange controls.

Officials of Marubeni, Japan's third-largest trading house, have denied any wrongdoing, although the firm's president and two of its executive directors have resigned.

Central Saanich Mailbox Vandals Given Warning

Central Saanich police have warned vandals who have been rifling mailboxes in the area the penalty for the offence is a maximum of 10 years in prison.

Chief Bob Miles said 35 to 40 complaints have been received since just before Christmas, mainly in the Greig Avenue and Brentwood Drive areas.

Items have been taken from mailboxes and either thrown on the ground nearby or taken a short distance away and opened and the contents thrown away.

Some residents have lost income tax forms and other important papers and in one case birthday presents for a young child were ripped out of their parcel and thrown into a tree.

Police believe four or five juveniles are responsible and Miles said they probably did not realize that their actions constitute theft of the mails which brings a maximum 10-year prison term.

TOOTHPASTE SQUEEZE OVER CANCER CLAIMS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A group headed by Ralph Nader today sued the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to force a ban and seizure of medicines and toothpastes which contain chloroform on grounds the drug causes cancer.

The suit, filed by Nader's public citizen group against FDA commissioner Alexander Schmidt, alleged that chloroform has no medical benefits and "presents consumers with the risk of contracting cancer."

At the same time, public citizen's health research group said it has sent a letter to Health, Education and Welfare Secretary F. David Mathews, urging him to declare chloroform an imminent hazard to the public health and asking he issue an immediate ban and recall on all drugs containing it.

Dr. Sidney Wolfe, head of the health research group, cited a report on a study by the National Cancer Institute which said that mice and rats fed chloroform had developed liver and kidney cancers.

Wolfe said the report, along with tests by the health research group on toothpastes and findings of an FDA panel which studied non-prescription cough and cold remedies, "heightens the urgency of this dangerous situation and makes the declaration . . . of an imminent hazard to be essential."

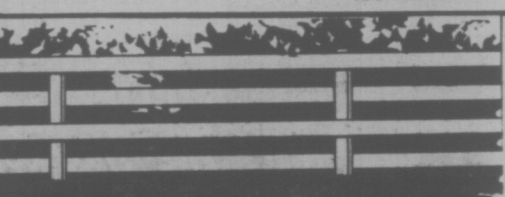

The tests on eight toothpaste brands showed that two, Ultra Brite manufactured by the Colgate-Palmolive Co., and McLean's, "contained significant amounts of chloroform," Wolfe said.
